"We have a society in which everything is creaking, from healthcare to housing, and yet we keep our borders open to people from cultures that are often diametrically opposed to our values... ~ May 22, 2014, Trouw (major Dutch newspaper), 'Vrouwelijke rechters in de meerderheid' ('Female judges in the majority'). Council of Europe numbers for 2021 reveal 60.2% of judges, 60.2% of prosecutors (same percentage), 67.6% prosecutor staff, and 45.6% of lawyers are women. [2] One noteworthy thing is that certainly with the female judges and prosecutors is that all "research" coincidentally comes down to political correctness, cutting-and-pasting, forgery, hiding and pushing out counter-evidence, etc.

INTRO

Elite funding

Apart from summarizing a bit of LGBTQ and gender science, the primary purpose of this oversight is to demonstrate that the entire international feminist and LGBTQ obsession of the media and politics, especially since the Obama years, actually is heavily financed by the globalist superclass and its countless "liberal CIA" foundations: Soros, Buffett, Ford, Rockefeller, Carnegie, Gates, etc.

In particular, we are talking here about so-called "grassroots" action groups regularly staging "independent" protests to demand "social change". It's all stage-play. The organizers and many of the core participants always are tied in with international NGOs and political parties, with whole armies of antifa anarchists and communists being coordinated by the European Union and Soros' Open Society Foundations. The U.S. has its own, overlapping structures. The issue is that the media just always pretends that these protesters represent actual "grassroots" citizens. But nothing could be further from the truth.

Perversion / poison pills

As we will discuss in detail, throughout history the feminist movement has been financed by Rockefeller and Rockefeller-tied elites, and involved very manipulative, very divisive propaganda even in the early 20th century. ISGP refers to this pattern as "perversion", as in, a perversion of a truly independent, truly grassroots, truthful movement. It is synonymous with the term "poison pill".

All of it reminds us very much of the oppressive, propagandist manner in which "liberal CIA" foundations as Ford, Rockefeller, Carnegie and Soros - as well as social media as Instagram and Tiktok - even today are non-stop sowing the seeds of division between races, genders, generations, and nationalities. Most importantly, all these entities are part of the globalist movement that certainly since the 1950s and 1960s has relentlessly pushed for the replacement of white people by the masses of the Third World. But the seeds for that already were laid in the late 19th and early 20th century.

History of feminism discussed: formal vs accurate

Who would have thought? Writing about feminism eventually required studying the (formal) history of feminism...

Timeline of feminist laws: 1641-today

The basic feminist breakthroughs for U.S. women are:

1. 1641: The Massachusetts Bay Colony introduces a law against abusive husbands. Enforcement is largely lacking.
2. 1824: Massachusetts bans the physical abuse of a spouse, but "moderate" disciple by the husband - and only the husband, due to the "coverture" legal doctrine - remains allowed.
3. 1824: New York ups the minimum age for marriage for girls to 14, upped from the common minimum age of 12 for girls in earlier times (14 for boys). Parental consent still is required below age 21.
4. 1836: New York state recognizes assault on a wife as a criminal offense. From the 1850s on, this law starts getting enforced increasingly often.
5. 1837: Oberlin College becomes the first in allowing women to attend.
6. 1842: Connecticut starts introducing laws against assault on wives, with certainly a number of cases of serious assault being prosecuted.
7. 1848: Married women could now own property separately from their husbands, greatly undermining the centuries old "coverture" legal doctrine in which women are subordinate to their husbands. State laws would continue to expand these laws.
8. 1848: Massachusetts introduces compulsory education for boys and girls in the ages 8-14.
9. 1860: Married women gain control over their wage income, independent from their husbands. State laws would continue to expand these laws.
10. 1861 (UK): Offences Against the Person Act, making physical abuse of spouses illegal.
11. 1869: Wyoming becomes the first U.S. territory to provide women with full voting rights.

12. 1870: Cornell University becomes the first major, internationally prestigious university to allow women.
13. 1874: New York and California follow Massachusetts in introducing compulsory education for boys and girls in the ages 8-14.
14. 1890s: States as New York and California increase the age for compulsory education for boys and girls to 16, due to higher literacy requirements in the age of the Industrial Revolution.

15. 1918: All U.S. states at this point have some form of compulsory education.
16. 1920: National voting rights for women.
17. 1920: Over the past 3-4 decades, the age of consent has been going up dramatically through lobbying by Christian feminists of the social purity movement. By 1920, the age of consent is 14 in only one state (Georgia, until 1995), 16 in 26 states, and 18 in 21 states. Compare this to 1880 when the age of consent was 10 in 37 states, 12 in 10 states, and 7 years in Delaware. There were no close-in-age laws in these periods, so senior citizens could "consensually" have sex with 7- to 12-year-olds. For decades though, socially accepted underage marriages still would remain a thing though:
    - 1937: Unlawful, underage child marriages become increasingly hard to enact due to a major national controversy over a marriage in Tennessee between a 9-year-old Eunice Winstead and a 22-year-old Charlie Johns. First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt joins the protests, agreeing that Eunice is a "little young for nuptials."[4] Another unlawful case - with parental consent - at the same time in Watertown, New York, between a 12-year-old girl and 19-year-old boy, added to the controversy. In all fairness, in 1960 Eunice described having been lucky with Charlie being a "good husband"[5], with the 12-year-old bride in New York - Leona Elizabeth Roshia - complaining: "I wish everyone would mind their own business. I am very happy."[6]
18. 1936: The right for doctors to import (early) contraceptives, undermining the strict 1870 Comstock Law that included "contraceptives" in a list of "obscene" material banned from importing.

19. 1960: Introduction of the birth control pill.
20. 1963: Equal pay for equal work for men and women.
21. 1965: Contraception use made legal nation-wide for married couples.
22. 1967: Colorado, California and a few other states start to expand the rights of women to abortion beyond saving the life of the mother.
23. 1972: Contraception use made legal nation-wide for unmarried couples.

24. 1972: Formal equal access to education.
25. 1973: The right to abortion is set federally.
26. 1974: Women allowed to credit, loans, and bank accounts without needing their husband as a co-signer.
27. 1994: The first federal law against (physical) domestic abuse, specifically to protect women, called the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).
28. 1991: Argentina introduces a law requiring that 30% of national candidates need to be women in 1991. Belgium (1994), France (2000) and other countries followed suit.
29. 2003: Norway introduces a law that at least 40% of any board of publicly-traded companies needs to be female. France (2011), Germany (2015) and then the European Union (2022 - 40% of non-executive directors or 33% of all directors) follow suit with overlapping laws. These laws also served as the inspiration behind globalist businessmen as BlackRock founder Larry Fink and Warren "Yeah, most women do want to see my wallet" [7] Buffett, in 2014, setting up the 30% Club, with the "Goal of achieving 30% female directors on S&P 100 boards by 2020 ... up from 21.7% when it launched."

Timeline of feminist laws: 1953 - porn, prostitution, sex

You could also include erotics and pornography in the above list, because, good or bad, it gives tons of (financial, fame, worship, and expression-type) "empowerment" to women, certainly when male control over the industry was stripped - OnlyFans from the late 2010s being the best example:

1. 1953: The founding of Playboy magazine, for many years operating in a legal grey area of promoting itself as an expression of "art".
2. 1957: The 1870 Comstock Law is further undermined when sexual material isn't necessarily banned anymore.
3. 1962: The first silicone breast implant is introduced. Certainly by 1972, in her film 'Le Chic', porn star Rene Bond is among the first (later) known examples of breast enlargement.
4. 1965: Penthouse magazine is founded, also operating in a legal grey area.
5. 1969: Private possession of pornography material becomes legal.
6. 1971: Nevada allows state-wide prostitution, letting counties decide themselves whether they want to legalize it or not.
7. 1973: Pornography becomes legal in a general sense.
8. 1973: Pornography becomes legal in a general sense.
9. 1980s-1990s: Breast implants keep growing in size and become much more mainstream, especially with Pamela Anderson in the 1990s.

Feminism's mainstream 4-waves model

Just looking at these lists, I would definitely be among those to reject the prominent "four waves" of feminism, despite it literally (and wrongly) saying on Wikipedia that only "non-white" feminists do so. These waves are formally defined as follows:

1. 1st Wave (late 1800s - early 1900s): Mainly about women's suffrage: the fight for women's right to vote. This was achieved in 1920.
2. 2nd Wave (1960s–1980s): About workplace, reproductive, and educational equality. The introduction of the birth control pill in 1960 made birth control many times more effective, and shook things up quite a bit.
3. 3rd Wave (1990s–2000s): A focus on more diversity ("intersectionality") within the female experience, as in, "Women aren't all the same." Instead of all women being "boring", middle class (white) women, women began splitting off into their own social subgroups, diversified their self-expression, and more and more started to break gender norms. This involves openness about lesbian/bisexual affairs, different expressions through music (punk, pop, hip hop), different girl magazines, and difference in clothing.
4. 4th Wave (2012-): Mainly focused on "fat is sexy", "destroying the patriarchy", angrily and artificially demanding equal pay down to the last cent and equal representation at the top layers of society, blaming white men for everything, supporting false and less false rape accusations against white men, and supporting white guilt and unlimited Third World immigration. #MeToo from 2017 likely was the most significant turning point.

Debunking the 4-waves model

The first two waves certainly are understandable, as in terms of legislation pretty much stopped in 1920, and was only picked up again with the introduction of the birth control pill in 1960, changing a lot of things, for women in particular. So it makes sense that newspapers started writing about a "second wave" in the 1960s that preceded a "first wave" - that largely ended around 1920. But to say that that first wave began in the late 1800s is not exactly correct. 1848 is a key year: it saw the first compulsory education for both both and girls up to the age of 14. It also saw the beginning of the end for the "coverture" legal doctrine. And even before that, an increasing amount of laws were passed to try and protect women from domestic abuse.

While the description of the 4th wave speaks for itself here, just a casual read-up on the supposed 4-wave feminist model exposes numerous issues:

1. For starters, to label feminist activists and breakthroughs from the 19th century and earlier, as "proto-feminists", comes across as a quick fix for the initially flawed theory that feminism started in the late 1800s and mainly was focused on voting rights.
2. Only the first two waves had clear legal laws as their base: abortion, birth control, education and age-of-consent.
3. The Third Wave is a particularly weird one, to me, as the "diversification" of both the male and female experience already was long underway before the 1990s, or even 1980s. Looking at old footage, from the 1930s, the 1950s, 1960s, I always am surprised how "normal" relations were between men and women - if not more normal than today. In addition:
    - The 1950s saw Elvis Presley emerge as a key symbol of new and "dangerous" rock and roll-type music, heavily influencing women in particular. The 1960s introduced additional types of rock music, as well as other music genres, such as soul and R&B, each with their own subgroups.
    - In the 1950s famous models as Marilyn Monroe and Audrey Hepburn already were privately wearing jeans, slim trousers, cigarette pants, and capris. Fashion is a powerful cultural expression. By the 1970s, looking at hippies and older movies, tons of women were wearing jeans instead of skirts.
    - So what happened in the 1990s? Apart from mass immigration by Muslims and blacks having their own "extra special" societal subgroups?
4. The "third wave" of feminism largely was defined as such through a 1992 Ms. magazine essay of black activist Rebecca Walker titled 'Becoming the Third Wave', the same year she founded the Third Wave Direct Action Corporation. A quick check reveals that Rebecca is the daughter of black antifa, anti-Israel, pro-David Icke, pro-BDS Alice Walker (b. 1944), who used to study under none other than antifa godfather Howard Zinn, whose biography is listed in ISGP's "liberal CIA" article. She ended up working for the Legal Defense Fund of the "liberal CIA" NAACP, and then wrote the novel 'The Color Purple', the movie of which was directed by Steven Spielberg and starred black antifa and feminists as as Whoopi Goldberg, Danny Glover and Oprah Winfrey. Oh, the elder Walker also worked as an editor-in-chief of Ms. Magazine, later used as a key vehicle for her daughter, a Yale student, to introduce the "third wave" of feminism.
5. The argument for the 4th wave starting in and around 2012 essentially is the spreading of feminist propaganda through social media platforms - instead of just through websites and forums. There probably was an acceleration of this at the time, but fact is, nothing particularly relevant happened that year, apart from Facebook buying Instagram. Social media already was a thing though in the mid 2000s. You also had internet forums since the late 1990s. Then, from a legal perspective, in terms of equal female representation, the 4th wave arguably started in Argentina in 1991 in terms of politics, continued in Norway in 2003 with regard to big business, and in terms of sexual abuse (and "abuse") and body-shaming only really took off with #MeToo in 2017 (Victoria's Secret shut down its annual runway event due to it in 2019). You could label the latter as a continuation of domestic abuse laws though going back to 1641, including the 1994 Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) that already saw a bit of claw back after women started exploiting the laws to get paid.

ISGP's alternate 10-phase feminism: 1641-21st century

So in essence, the talk about feminist "waves" is silly. It's "revolutionary" talk. Based on the above timelime of mainly legal breakthroughs, this author prefers to speak of "phases" instead, and really even parallel "tracks", as each phase took a different amount of time to complete. So the ISGP model for feminist history would be:

1. Phase 1 (1641- / early 1800s-): Early attempts to curb domestic abuse.
2. Phase 2 (1837-): Upper-class women quickly allowed into various college and eventually university educations.
3. Phase 3 (1848-): The end of "coverture". Women given legal independence from their husbands in property, wage and trade-ownership.
4. Phase 4 (1848- / 1874-): Equal basic education for all boys and girls, mixed with college and university access for women.
5. Phase 5 (1869-1920): Voting rights for women.
6. Phase 6 (1880s-1920): Upping the age of consent from 7- to 10-years-old to 16- or 18-years-old, except for Georgia, which stayed at 14 until 1995.
7. Phase 7 (1936- / 1960-): Legalization of contraception, followed in 1960 by effective contraception.
8. Phase 8 (1957-): Freedom in public sexual expression, 4 years after the founding of Playboy.
9. Phase 9 (1967-1973): The right to abort a baby.
10. Phase 10 (1971): Legalized prostitution, but still only in Nevada.

Feminism phase 11 / "4th wave": the first real phase of anti-feminism

In this model, something like forced female representation in political parties (1991-) and corporate boards (2003-) would constitute a bit of new phase - phase 11 - and maybe also a phase where things may have gone too far. Phases 2 and 3, for example, were about setting women free: you can go where you want to go. But this new phase 11 of "minimum quotas" arguably is about actively "breaking the patriarchy": you are going to go there, even of there more dedicated and competent men than you. This, of course, falls into a broader pattern:

1. 2010s: Fat is beautiful: don't bother eating healthy.
2. 2010s: Gender neutral restrooms, so women can easily harassed and raped here by men.
3. 2010s: Female transgenders replacing biological women in sports, so women can't wearn medals anymore.
4. 2017-: Women's lies about sexual abuse and rape being increasingly rewarded in court rooms.

Ever more extreme and apocalyptic

In more detail, over the decades the foundation-funded "feminist" groups took an ever more extreme character:

1. Initially things were feminism was about ownership, domestic abuse, education, age-of-consent, voting, reproductive, and labor rights.
2. This was followed by the destruction of traditional gender roles in society.
3. Next women were told that they were fully "equal" to men, on and off the workplace.
4. Women were being put up to hate men, by seeing them as "patriarchal oppressors".
5. By the late 2010s fat-is-sexy-too were in full-swing.
6. Certainly after #MeToo in 2017 - but also due to huge numbers of women becoming prosecutors and judges - women's lies about sexual abuse and rape started being increasingly rewarded in court rooms.
7. Certainly since the Instagram and TikTok social media era of the late 2010s, women's kink-factor was being turned on by making them maximally bisexual and lesbian - while telling them "they don't need men".
8. This was quickly followed by the total destruction of the whole concept of "gender", which actually has been to the detriment of women, most obviously in sports, followed by mixed restrooms, and less obviously as whole-sale ladyboy replacement - as promoted on Instagram and TikTok.
9. By 2023 it had become very fashionable on social media as Instagram and TikTok, and in the regular media, to tell women that it is perfectly fine to have zero kids. Ironically, the first feminist on social media that I noticed pushing the "no chlildren" concept was a certain Xenia Tchoumi, who just happened to be a Davos invitee, and soon also turned out to have been an early protege of notorious pedophile Trilateral Commission member Jeffrey Epstein.

10. By 2023 women also were increasingly being stimulated on TikTok to have babies with black men, followed more extremely by Instagram in 2024-2025.
11. Finally, by 2025, women were being brainwashed much more aggressively on Instagram as well into seeing black men as more desirable and superior than white men - which clearly is working looking at a local 46x overrepresentation of hot women dating Third World immigrants than vice versa.

Certainly no later than the early 2020s TikTok and Instagram were increasingly blatantly peppering users of their platforms with transsexual and kinky male gay propaganda (also see this in context with massive Nazi-like disinformatiomn against the Jews). But "liberal CIA" foundations, activist "grassroots" groups they finance, Bilderberg and Davos-tied political leaders, the media, social media as TikTok and Instagram, and Hollywood actors all are playing a very key and very joint role in the promotion of this type of feminist and LGBTQ propaganda.

Omissions

For the rest, I personally couldn't care less about the official "scholarly" history of feminism. Reading up on all the details of feminism's basic history, starting with Wikipedia's 'The History of Feminism', there are just too many omissions:

1. Historical Eastern Establishment families as Carnegie, Rockefeller, Morgan, Schiff, Warburg-Rothschild, Vanderbilt, etc. funding all aspects of the feminist movement, ultimately supplanted by the "liberal CIA" foundations.
2. The feminist and elite ties with Spartan- and Nazi-esque eugenics.
3. The poison pill history of Planned Parenthood and the Birth Control pill alone.
4. Differences in female violence and behavior versus their male counterparts.
5. Physical differences between men and women.
6. "Diablo Cody / Megan Fox feminism" versus "globalist feminism", i.e. "Rockefeller feminism", "Soros feminism", or "political feminism". Meaning: women gaining power over men through seduction and manipulation versus working side-by-side at the production line and not bothering with getting babies. This is extra relevant, because Fox has claimed she was an early feminist in Hollywood, before #MeToo, but has received little to no support along those lines. [8]
7. The "anti-feminist" or realist views of Niccolo Machiavelli (1469-1527) [9], Arthur Schopenhauer (1788-1860). [10], and Friedrich Nietzsche (1844-1900). [11] These show that the endless TikTok and Instagram suggestions of the early 2020s on "how women really are"

was nothing unique in terms of historical views on women - which are increasingly heavily suppressed in the media and education.

8. Seeing "fourth wave feminism" (2012-) as some kind of healthy movement.
9. Women empowerment through control over their own sexuality: pornography and prostitution, especially in the OnlyFans era that started in the late 2010s.

Rockefeller-backed Planned Parenthood founder castigated women for birthing babies to supply dictators with "cannon fodder"

Let's talk about some of the above-mentioned omissions from feminist history. The American Birth Control League, a key NGO for feminist causes, was founded by Margaret Sanger in 1921 and financially maintained from the earliest stages through the efforts of key Eastern Establishment (Pilgrims Society) families as Morgan, Carnegie, Rockefeller, Warburg-Rothschild, Vanderbilt, Schiff, McCormick and others. To this day this NGO might well be the most famous of the feminist ones, this under the name Planned Parenthood, the name it has gone by since 1942. Hollywood actors continually cooperate with and support Planned Parenthood.

Going back in time, in 1927, Margaret Sanger, with Rockefeller Foundation money, also hosted the first World Population Conference, focused on the worry that uncontrolled population growth could outstrip natural resources of the West. While Sanger had to promise to keep the subject of birth control out of the World Population Conference, her views, and hence the Rockefeller Foundation's agenda, were rather well documented in her 1920-published book 'Women and the New Race':

> "Even as birth control is the means by which woman attains basic freedom, so it is the means by which she must and will uproot the evil she has wrought through her submission. ... She has unconsciously and ignorantly brought about social disaster... [In their] hopeless subjection, [women] went on breeding with staggering rapidity those numberless, undesired children who become the clogs and the destroyers of civilization. ...
> "The creators of over-population are the women, who, while wringing their hands over each fresh horror, submit anew to their task of producing the multitudes who will bring about the next tragedy of civilization. ... Through her reproductive ability, [they] founded and perpetuated the tyrannies of the Earth. Whether it was the tyranny of a monarchy, an oligarchy or a republic, the one indispensable factor of its existence was, as it is now, hordes of ... human beings so plentiful as to be cheap, and so cheap that > ignorance was their natural lot [in turn leading to] submissive maternity... No period of low wages ... no peonage or sweatshop, no child-labor factory, ever came into being, save from the same source. ... Famine and plague [too have] been ... acts of too prolific mothers. ...

> "[But today] millions of women are asserting their right to voluntary motherhood. They are determined to decide for themselves whether they shall become mothers, under what conditions and when. This is the fundamental revolt referred to." [12]

The arguing here is rather odd and insidious. Sanger is literally making women feel guilty for birthing children. And at the same time, maybe even more strangely, is making the case that we don't need a large base of workers and consumers. Ironically, certainly an overpopulation of white children didn't prevent elites from shipping in black slaves from Africa to work for free on plantations.

In her 1922 book 'The Pivot of Civilization' we find more of these extremist positions. The basic premise of this latter book, whose foreword was written by the famous author H.G. Wells, can be summarized as follows:

1. Mainly people with affluent backgrounds are "fit" to have childen, as they are smart enough to make enough money to be able to care for their kids in terms of housing, diet, and schooling. [13]
2. "Poverty-stricken" people, similar to the "feeble-minded" and the "mentally defective", belong to the "inferior classes", and are "unfit" to have children [14] - certainly more than one.
3. In general, "the greatest crime of modern civilization" [15] is to allow "the abysmally ignorant and irresponsible classes" [16] and "the moron and the imbecile [to] set the pace" [17] in creating the most amount of babies.
4. Per the insinuations and selective examples of Sanger, poor people look at having children either as becoming "enslaved" [18], or do so out of "stupid, cruel sentimentalism" [19] - because their children will generally live in poverty too. Sanger also singles out examples such as men humiliating their wives for producing too many children that die during birth or in their early years. [20]
5. If these "poverty-stricken" people do not stop making babies, "possibly drastic and Spartan methods may be forced upon American society" to stop them from doing so. [21] Considering it is generally assumed that Spartans killed "defective" babies, one assumes this means killing babies that have already been born.
6. Poor people - a.k.a. "the proletariat, the breeders of the world" [22] - are inclined to support communism, whose leaders are purposely looking to increase children among the poor to make a communist revolution easier. [23] The same goes for "militarism like Socialism [that] has always encouraged the proletariat to increase and multiply." [24] Hence, no kids for communists and socialists. It appears this has been an extreme exaggeration, if not an all-out invention.

7. Even having an average of just 2.5 children per mother - only just above the minimum to sustain society and roughly the birth rate in the 1920s, which went to 2 in the 1930s - apparently is too high. [25] This is something to think about. In 1920 about 120 million people were living in the United States, with a fertility/birth rate of around 3.2. That birth rate was coming down rapidly though, from being about 5.5 in 1850 to just 2 in the late 1930s, right before World War II. The reasons for these lowering birth rates were three-fold. Did they involve eugenics and birth control? Not exactly. The real reasons were:
    1. A reduction in child deaths: Birth and child deaths rapidly declined in this period, taking away the need to create "entire litters" with the hope about half survived.
    2. Urbanization: Out on the farm, children were economic assets. But in the big city, children were economic costs. You had to house, feed and school them without them bringing in much income to a shared household.
    3. The Great Depression (1929-1939): The economic uncertainty helped lower births further, only to increase again during and after World War II when the economy picked up again.
8. Malthusian warnings about population growth outstripping food production growth were supported by Sanger, and derided by the communists, who claimed they were propaganda by the "capitalist" class. [26] A main concern of Sanger was that food shortages would result in a competition for resources and thus threaten "world peace". [27]
9. In line with this, an important point of Sanger remained that having so many "feeble-minded", inferior people" around is just providing cannon fodder for despotic conquerors. [28]
10. Sanger, agreeing here too with Thomas Malthus (1766-1834), wrote that "organized charity itself is the symptom of a malignant social disease", because the fact that we need it, is "surest sign that our civilization has bred, is breeding and is perpetuating constantly increasing numbers of defectives, delinquents and dependents." [29] Ironically, Sanger's Planned Parenthood and other endeavors have always been dependent on charity by the same robber baron forces.

What to even make of this book? Sanger cited a Dr. R. Austin Freeman (1862–1943) in it, who wrote:

> "Compared with the African negro ... the British sub-man is in several respects markedly inferior. He tends to be dull; he is usually quite helpless and unhandy; he has, as a rule, no skill or knowledge of handicraft, or indeed knowledge of any kind..."[30]

Okay, that's a new one. The genetic aspect of (pure) black IQ compared to pure white is at least 13 to 15 points. So was this a late argument in favor of slavery? Or an early argument in favor of Third World immigration? Well, the key word here is white "sub-[hu]man": a lowly educated factory-dweller who has no clue how to live off the land, compared to the romantic view of African tribesmen. Even then, this is a case of nurture; not nature. Because Sanger didn't also quote Freeman as writing, "the negro race is admittedly far inferior to any white race"[31], she causes a bit of confusion, at least in later generations. Additionally, she cited Freeman as saying:

> "Over-population is a phenomenon connected with the survival of the unfit, and it is mechanism which has created conditions favorable to the survival of the unfit and the elimination of the fit."[32]

This too is a bit oversimplified and harsh. If you don't provide proper education to the masses, and exploit them to the maximum extent in factories, they can't develop in the same manner that people born into richness do, especially not people who prefer to not be ruthless. Is a deer inferior to a wolf? Not really: the deer is just more peaceful. Also, you need a consumer class.

Is there anything (fully) accurate about Sanger's 1922 book? Well, H.G. Wells' words in the introduction of the book are harsh, but not unreasonable in tying the torturous and murderous practices of Native Indians and Mayans to "certain types of lunatic [in modern] asylums." But even he was wrong with his central premise that a "surplus of [Mayan] population was disposed of by an organization of sacrificial slaughter unparalleled in the records of mankind." [33] And that's a big error, considering eugenics is the central subject of the book. Ritual sacrifice did take place, especially with the Aztec, but there is no evidence it was done to control the growth of the population.

So, pretty much the only accurate statements in the book involve corporate exploitation of the working class, and accurately tying low IQ to increased crime:

> "At least 25 per cent of the inmates of our prisons, according to Dr. Fernald, are mentally defective and belong either to the feeble-minded or to the defective-delinquent class. Nearly 50 per cent of the girls sent to reformatories are mental defectives."[34]

Sanger also ties lower IQ to higher birth rates, but doesn't look at Third World ethnicities. At one point it seems to make the case that a black "feeble-minded girl," living "in a thickly populated Negro district which was reported by the police to be the headquarters for the criminal element of the surrounding State", got 16 children in short order - but Sanger never explicitly mentions the race. [35] "Negro" or "African" isn't mentioned anywhere else in the book.

To conclude, basically the whole book is nonsense. Birth rates already were coming down a lot. And the basic solution to improve the quality of life of the "inferior classes" has been to limit corporate "robber baron"-influence over the government, so that the "inferior classes" could also receive a bit of education and start making a decent living. Besides early exposes as the 1902-1904 McClure series 'The History of the Standard Oil Company', and other Rockefeller-tied events as the Colorado Coalfield War (1913) and Ludlow Massacre (1914), FDR's New Deal laws of the mid 1930s made the biggest difference in this regard. The various New Deal laws allowed unionization (Wagner Act), limited the workweek to 40 hours, established a minimum wage, introduced overpay laws, and banned child labor.

Building codes made a big difference: such as the setting minimum standards for window and light requirements, sewers and indoor plumbing, indoor ventilation, overcrowding, fire escapes, and eventually, insulation. Food and drug protection laws, improvements in agricultural practices, and scientific breaktroughs leading to major reductions in child mortality all played key roles in not only growing the population of the United States, but also in helping the "inferior classes" to reach their full potential.

The Rockefeller-tied Margaret Sanger herself admits to all these exploitation issues, but does not describe them as the core of the problem:

> "Love and hunger [is] driving young women into the factories to work, night in and night out, to support their procession of uncared for and undernourished babies... They are driven to it by the low wages of their husbands. They choose night work in order to be with their children in the daytime. ... Thus they condemn themselves to eighteen or twenty hours of daily toil. Surely no mother with three, four, five or six children can secure much rest by day. ...
> "When the worker, cruelly tired from ten hours' work, comes home in the early morning, she usually scrambles together breakfast for the family. Eating little or nothing herself, and that hastily, she tumbles into bed... in a stuffy little bed-room, darkened imperfectly if at all."[36]

As I said, a strange book. But the again, every Rockefeller-tied has always been.

Birth control pill a Rockefeller creation

In the previous section we discussed the Rockefeller-financed feminist / feminazi Margaret Sanger, the founder of what became Planned Parenthood. In an additional Rockefeller tie, since 1917 she was a collaborator of Katharine McCormick (1875-1967). Let's be specific here, because the connection can be confusing: Katharine's husband's brother married the daughter of John D. Rockefeller, Sr. So Katharine Dexter McCormick was the sister-in-law to Edith Rockefeller McCormick:

1. Cyrus Hall McCormick (Sr.) (1809-1884): Founder of what became International Harvester Company, with other members of this prominent Chicago family publishing the Chicago Tribune and founding the William Blair & Co. investment company. [37]

    1. Cyrus Hall McCormick Jr. (1859–1936): Oldest son of Cyrus Sr. The banker/industrialist you can see in the Pilgrims Society article listed as a director of the National City Bank, the bank where the Rockefeller's stashed their Standard Oil money and overseen by Rockefeller inlaws the Stillmans.

    2. Harold Fowler McCormick (1872–1941): A younger brother of Cyrus Jr. Married Edith Rockefeller, the youngest daughter of John D. Rockefeller, Sr.

    3. Stanley Robert McCormick (1874-1947): The 7th and youngest child of Cyrus Sr. In 1904 he married Katharine McCormick (1875-1967). Already in 1906 he suffered from such mental illness that he was considered legally incompetent. No children followed. According to Katharine, mainly Stanley's mother was to blame, with an intake report reading, All the family of nervous temperament, mother eccentric, sister insane."[38]

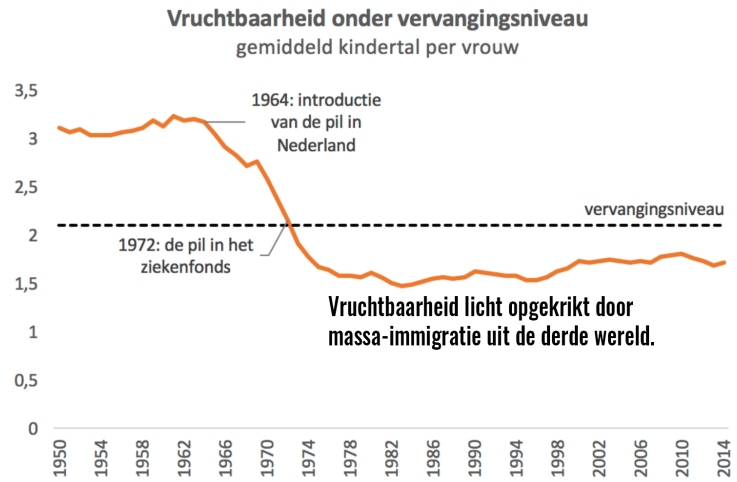
Katherine McCormick served as vice president and treasurer of the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA; in relation to voting rights), founded in 1890, and financed NAWSA's Woman's Journal. She first met birth control activist Margaret Sanger in 1917 [39] and joined the Committee of 100 of the National Birth Control League that Sanger also was allied with. After more than three decades of feminist cooperation [40], with McCormick co-funding many of Sanger's endeavors, in 1953 Sanger introduced McCormick to Gregory Pincus to continue his development of the oral birth control pill in a non-profit manner. After millions of key funding by McCormick, in 1960 Pincus succeeded in getting FDA approval for his pill as a contraception. [41] By the time

McCormick died in 1967, she had provided $2 million (equivalent to $19 million in 2025) to Pincus' research.

So, almost 40 years after writing her genocidal ("Spartan methods") feminazi propaganda books 'Women and the New Race' (1920) and 'The Pivot of Civilization' (1922), Margaret Sanger got what she wanted above anything else: a pill to prevent the "inferior classes" from procreating. A bit late, considering the "inferior classes'" situation had dramatically improved in the 1960s, but better late than never.

Subsequently, in no small part due to global promotion and lobbying by the John D. Rockefeller III-founded Population Council in 1952, which had the same "family planning" and "birth control" agenda as Sanger in decades past, the birth control pill was quickly spread to countries around the world, and being taken up in national healthcare programs. The result? A halving of birth rates in 10 to 15 years. The following graph, for example, is from the Netherlands:



Ironically, and as discussed in the White Guilt Warfare article, the same year that birth control pill was introduced in the Netherlands in 1964, is the first year that the Netherlands started bringing in Turkish "guest workers", soon followed by Moroccans, and eventually the entire Third World. Why? Well, for a number of arguments. While the narrative has switched to "poor refugees", the main excuse given for decades has been that the white birth rates in the West are too low. But who caused those white birth rates to be so low? That's right, the globalist movement with the Rockefellers at the core. And its Population Council funded other methods of Birth Control as well. [42]

You couldn't make a movie with a scenario like this, because it would never be considered credible. And yet, it is reality. The birth control and family planning thing wouldn't even that bad if public government guidelines are being given on the average number of children per mother the government desires for sustainable growth. But none of that has ever been done. The pill was introduced, put into healthcare programs to cover the costs, and elites watched birth rates collapse. Immediately they started bringing in Third World migrants, followed by anti-racism laws to stop the public from effectively opposing this.

It gets stranger still when you realize that the Morgans, Rockefellers and allied Eastern Establishment "robber baron" families were doing business with the fascists through outfits as the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), and also financed a bogus version of the very real race IQ phenomenon, known as the "racist" eugenist movement (that Sanger and McCormick also were part of), that inspired Hitler's Aryan theories. The problem here is that the white race was falsely divided in a number of separate races: the superior Nordics (i.e. Aryans), the Alpines, the Southerners, and the Slavs; which Hitler than used to try and exterminate the Slavs. It also falsely labeled the Jews as inferior, while western Jews actually have among the highest IQs in the world, higher than whites. So the robber baron-funded eugenics movement, as well as Hitler, discredited the fact that there actually is such a thing as genetic race IQ and race crime. Post-World War II, and into the white replacement era, these facts conveniently couldn't be discussed anymore. And much of it was due to Rockefeller and allied money. But Rockefeller and globalist friends went untouched, as even a number of feminist authors observed:

> "It now seems strange that men who had been conspicuous in the eugenics movement were able to move quite painlessly into the population [control/reduction] establishment at the highest level, but if we reflect that the paymasters - Ford, Mellon, Du Pont, Standard Oil, Rockefeller and Shell - are still the same, we can only assume that people like Kingsley Davis, Frank W. Notestein, C. C. Little, E. A. Ross, the Osborns Frederick and Fairfield, Philip M. Hauser, Alan Guttmacher and Sheldon Segal were being rewarded for past services. ...
> "Frederick Osborn need have feared no conflict of interests when he set up the Population Council 'at the initiative of John D. Rockefeller III' in 1952."[43]

There really was no conflict of interest. Eugenics, the early birth control movement, Naziism, and the post-World War II population control movement and birth control pill all effectively were about reducing - if not fully getting rid of - relatively high IQ white (and Jewish) people. In that regard the birth control pill has been a massive success. In fact, until his death in 2023, somehow Richard Lynn - representing the 1937-founded eugenics-focused Pioneer Fund of J.P. Morgan in-laws and Rockefeller-allied Osborns [44] and allies - was the only widely-cited "general authority" on race IQ. And while mostly accurate, he has always been conveniently overly derisive with regard to Third World immigration and IQs.

We've seen it again and again. Much of the 20th and early 21st century revolved around the Rockefellers.

GENERAL

Feminism and LGBTQ increasingly dangerous

Personally, in contrast to Third World immigration, I never gave the pushing of feminism and LGBTQ much thought in terms of being a threat. As the reader can see in the previous section, maybe initially it wasn't really worth getting into, but the situation has rapidly changed since the early 2010s. The propaganda has become much more extreme.

It wasn't necessarily the propaganda, mainly on social media, that first made me realize that feminism is a threat. Fact is, on countless occasions I have observed that too many women - even more so women with massive egos due to formal education - simply cannot control their primal nature to go behind you back, lie, cheat, manipulate, blackmail, seek revenge for being told the truth, humiliate, emotionally withdraw, rage uncontrollably, force a man to "repent" (if the dispute involves a woman), no matter how irrational; and generally be first in adapting whatever bizarre authoritarian logic to be "accepted by authority". Sexual attraction and "being a man" matters a lot with women, much more than you've been educated about; and if you disappoint them, they will find all kinds of ways to punish you.

As so many influencers, my number one advice for men is to not politely, rationally "debate" any woman. It's seldom of any use. They'll just get increasingly angry, flustered, or they mentally shut down and that's that. If you can, joke a little, play a little, flirt a little, or, alternately, make it clear you don't care what she thinks. The "situationship" either works, or doesn't work. And if it doesn't work, leave and maybe come back later. Again, way too often and way too much is dictated by sexual energy when dealing with the opposite sex.

The thing is, with all these experiences: what about the 60-80% of judges who already are women? Or the 60-70% of prosecutors who already are? While avoiding en masse the much less influential position of lawyer? [45] Because that's where I most consistently observed all the above issues with women. And if it comes out, a good part of the population will probably vote in favor of public executions.

What about all the women allowed into politics? Or given preferential treatment for corporate positions? Or whom you're being forced to work next to at the police? Or in the army? Getting "the guys" emotionally involved, distracted, jealous, overly protective, annoyed, and much more politically correct? Because "boys" sure as heck cannot be "boys" when surrounded by women. Maybe when young in school, but not when older in a job position. They will get reprimanded, demoted, fined, fired, or even prosecuted in no time if they say everything they'll generally only say in the presence of "boys".

Luckily I consider psychiatry a politically-correct scam; otherwise I had to worry about the massive amounts of women there too.

No, men being forced to deal with women on an "equal" or inferior footing - beyond maybe being college classmates - has become a problem in society. It's a nice ideal and interesting experiment. But it's not necessarily working all too well.

It certainly can be argued that men stopped being men due to being so dependent on their wives, and having to work so much with, and under, women. It has limited their ability to speak out on their own male values to fight and protect, and organize against the state on such topics as immigration. You see it, for example, with Arab immigrants, where the women are largely locked up: the men still gangbang and riot together.

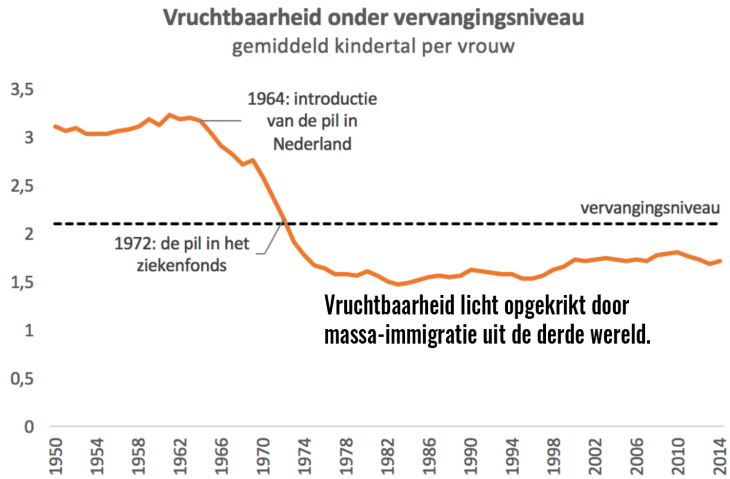
In any case, seeing televisions interviews from the 1950s and 1960s, family life seemed much more natural, healthy and loving than all those angry feminist stories about "the patriarchy" seem to suggest. Was it perfect? No. But it only needed a handful of tweaks: a bit more of an open mind, a few judicial and financial safeguards, and everything would be fine.

Arguably what we didn't need was maximally promiscuous, fun-chasing, full-time, career-chasing, artificially-promoted, man-hating women workers with too little time, money, or interest for more than 1 child. If even that, as we are also living in a world with massively skyrocketing housing prices due to relentless Third World immigration.

No, globalist feminism is corrosive and apocalyptic.

"Feminist" birth control pill halved birth rates in 10 years

Possibly the biggest issue with modern day globalist "feminism" are the collapsed birth rates - from 3+ to less than 1.5 - within a decade of the birth control pill being introduced in the 1960s. Here's the graph for the Netherlands, but it's the same in every other European country:



Dutch birth rate slightly pushed up again by superhigh birth rates of Third World immigrants: 5+ for Moroccans and 3+ for Turks until the 1990s. White birth rates in the 2020s appear to be around 1, especially with unaffordable housing.

The situation in the U.S. evolved slightly differently, but this whole subject has already been discussed and sourced in ISGP's White Guilt Warfare article.

The thing is, the lack of births may not just be due to the birth control pill. I personally have seen an endless string of women getting very excited about the prospect of having babies - with me, if I had money, normal health, and wasn't 100% focused on ISGP. But it generally takes them a long time to have babies with other men. I think it all comes down to creating a society with (very) affordable housing and other living expenses - one that people can believe in again has a future. And then create (military-type) men that women actually look up to, go crazy about, and want to have sex with - and (Amazon-type) women that men want to be loyal to and endlessly sleep with as well.

Child corporal punishment laws too strict?

The same corrosive and apocalyptic effects of feminist and LGBTQ propaganda, might well be true for something I only just noticed, and which I suspect has been the result of feminist, "liberal CIA" and United Nations lobbying: namely the fact that due to all the anti-corporal punishment laws of the past few decades it is getting very dicy even for parents to smack any of their dysfunctional children. Before you know it, it's "assault". That's hardly overdrawn. Look at how internationally viral Turkish president Erdogan went in July 2024 for superlightly tapping a child on the side of the face? [46] Clearly a message was being sent.

These laws instantly make it far less attractive to even have children. Smacking should be a last resort, but having to worry about a judge when a child is being wildly disrespectful to you, or other, adults is yet another strange issue in our society. In fact, I've seen plenty of school children, both of immigrant and native origin, maximally exploit the fact that teachers are barely allowed to touch. They misbehave to the max, get grabbed by an arm, and start screaming, "Ouch! Ouch! Abuse! Assault! I'm going to tell my parents! I'm going to go to the police!" Personally, if that was my son, any teacher can slap him to Kingdom Come until he never misbehaves again. Or her, a little softer.

One month after writing this section, the video above showed up. Exactly as said: a (Third World) kid verbally abuses the gym teacher, repeatedly treats a soft touch of the teacher to calm him down as "assault", dangerously threatens and then keeps pushing the teacher - who himself is desperate to keep his job. There are two burly assistants around who don't dare to do anything either, until a police officer - in another overreaction, possibly what he thinks is away from the cameras - comes to the aid and pretty much suplexes the student (and might face prosecution, despite likely being an upstanding citizen - but punching seems safer).
The problems? In order? 1) Third World students and parents. 2) Covert globalist financing and control of government, media and activism. 3) Women dominating education, the prosecutors' office and judging.

Is it a fine line? Sure. But society should largely self-regulate anyway, with citizens not being extremely afraid of a government that smacks down anyone "trying to play own judge". That's also why you actually need a society: people feeling that they belong together.

Then again. Women, gays, transsexuals and Third World migrants are running loose all over the place. So why not the children too?

Transsexuals actually supplanting women

I may have been naive for a long time about feminism and LGBTQ being a real problem. Ironically, for women, LGBTQ already should have been recognized as a threat for quite some time. Just the latest I noticed are social media posts of men dating ladyboys, explaining this is "not gay", how "amazingly feminine" they are, with t-shirts being worn reading "The future is ladyboy'.

Soon after, the algorithm boosted Pauly Shore explaining how much better transsexual pussies are compared to natural ones, this due to the design and scar tissue in ladyboy pussy giving extra sexual pleasure. Somewhat telling, Shore also threw in the endless TikTok and Instagram-fueled propaganda that blacks offer better sex than whites:

> "So I had sex with a transgender women. ... There was weird shit in there, because they man-made it. ... It was like literally the best orgasm I've ever had. You know what they say, "Once you go black, you don't go back"? Once you go trans, you don't go back either. So I'm not going to have sex anymore with just normal women. Only trans, because it's the best vagina in the world. A man-made pussy is better than a normal pussy."[47]

More pressing maybe is that women, and even underage girls, have already been banned left and right from their sports due to speaking out against having to play against (physically much stronger) transgenders. It's already happened in soccer [48], track events [49], fencing [50], and even bodybuilding. [51] Teenage girls protesting "a complete erasure of women in our sports" and wearing 'Save Girls Sports' and 'XX (doesnâ€™t equal) XY' t-shirts, had school officials comparing "it to wearing a swastika in front of a Jewish student."[52] Transsexual males can just walk into female restrooms, or the whole concept of gender-separated restrooms is done away with. Protest it as a woman, and you get banned from your gym [53] or run into trouble at school.

So yes, certainly since the Biden administration of 2021-2025 women have quickly been prevented from winning medals in sports due to being made subservient to transsexuals - which in the future likely is going to expand to workplace promotions as well. This process alone shows you that the globalist movement is not about feminism at all. It is about Satanic perversion. And Satan just loves trannies more than "feminists".

"Misogynists" and "transphobes" all to prison soon?

Los Angeles school officials drawing parallels between 'Save Girls Sports' protesters and Naziism, did make one interesting remark though, suggesting that the only thing protesters could do, is to "lobby your state legislators [because] they are the ones creating the laws that we are bound by."[54] The state law referred to is the usual "anti-discrimination" law, which in California goes for "discrimination ... based on their actual or perceived sex, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression..."[55]

In Great Britain these laws banning "hate" against "transgenders" already were in place since at least the 2010s. In fact, in 2019, the British government ordered judges to hand down a minimum of 6 months in prison for such crimes, higher than the minimum sentence for breaking into someone's home. [56]

What is considered "hate"? Good question. A British doctor who was fired as "a disability claims assessor for admitting he would not 'call any 6ft tall bearded man 'madam'" - regarding a person who may well have not wanted to work - apparently had as his only defense "religious freedom". [57] And while some British judges do try to oppose the ever expanding police registrations and laws on "hate" speech [58], which (undoubtedly "liberal CIA"-tied) lobbies are looking to expand to "misogyny, age, sex workers, homelessness, and some subcultures", it appears to be a bit of an uphill battle. [59] Through social media, Great Britain became notorious by 2024 for arresting and sentencing thousands of people annually for online comments, certainly of the anti-immigration kind. Some of the arrests actually are good, as they have been tackling people on both the left [60] and the right [61] who have been spreading disinformation and propaganda. The problem is, the only social media channels allowed to have any following are of this nature. It's all just a psyop.

The "transgender" and "feminist" issue is different though than the 2024 Southport riots - in the wake of Satanic-style murder by a Rwandan - that rocked Great Britain. If we move one country over, to the Netherlands, we find a 2023 amendment and expansion of the constitution that read like this:

> "Discrimination on grounds of religion, belief, political opinion, race, gender, disability, sexual orientation or on any other basis is not permitted."[62]

"Gender identity or expression" is still missing, but you can still squash the banning of transsexual athletes under under "gender", "sexual orientation" and "any other basis". Otherwise, you can once again expand the constitution with "gender identity or expression" in another few years, when there are enough transsexuals.

These laws are a problem, and not just because they essentially say that you have no freedom of speech. Throughout western Europe, prominent and less prominent white people already are being sentenced left and right for any remark perceived as "racist". In the Netherlands, for example, this could have happened from the 1983 anti-discrimination law on, but in practice it was mostly avoided doing so until mass migration really started to annoy the white Dutch people. It's the same in all surrounding countries: First "soft law": a statement of principles, then "hard law", and slowly you increase the intensity with which you enforce the law.

Quite possibly it's going to be the same with feminism and LGBTQ in the future. Call someone a "faggot" or dismiss an LGBTQ person from the workplace, and it's a work sentence. Call a tranny or gay person a "faggot", and it's off to prison for "hate". In July 2025, for example, a German soccer player refused to sign a fan's pride shirt, and quickly was forced to apologize and beg to keep his job. He better pray that the antifa hordes have not gotten the idea to force him to sign all their gay and transsexual "pride" t-shirts - every week. But in any case, this still is corporate-enforced "soft law". Well, sort off. It actually already is "hard law" in Germany: "discrimination" of any kind is not allowed. It's just not being enforced to that extent - yet. [63]

Similarly, UFC heads and fighters already have been forced for almost decades now to grovel and apologize for using the word "faggot", because they are getting bullied by globalist-controlled media outlets and activists that it is "homophobic". [64] This has forced all these "tough" fighters to stick to the word "bitch". Quite possibly that word will be banned too in the future. After all, it is "misogynist". Antifa rocker Kurt Cobain already suggested to do so in the 1990s. And in 2007 a New York City councilwoman got at least 18 other members to sign up on banning the word. [65] Today you laugh, but tomorrow the "liberal CIA" foundations will finance a campaign to ban the word "bitch" - and it will happen.

SCIENCE

We're not all "equal"

How does that popular mantra go? "We're all equal!" It sounds nice, and most people still assume it's true without thinking about it - but we're not. It's a lie. Ignoring skin color, races around the world are not "equal" in genetic IQ, crime numbers, physical traits, technological achievement, culture, etc. Similarly, men and women are not "equal". They have very different physical and even emotional traits, which are discussed in this article. In another example, women get 78% of the autoimmune diseases. [66] That's not "equal". Fact is, two members of both the same species and gender aren't even "equal". There will always be differences in IQ, height, dick size, fast twitch muscle percentage, or inherited wealth.

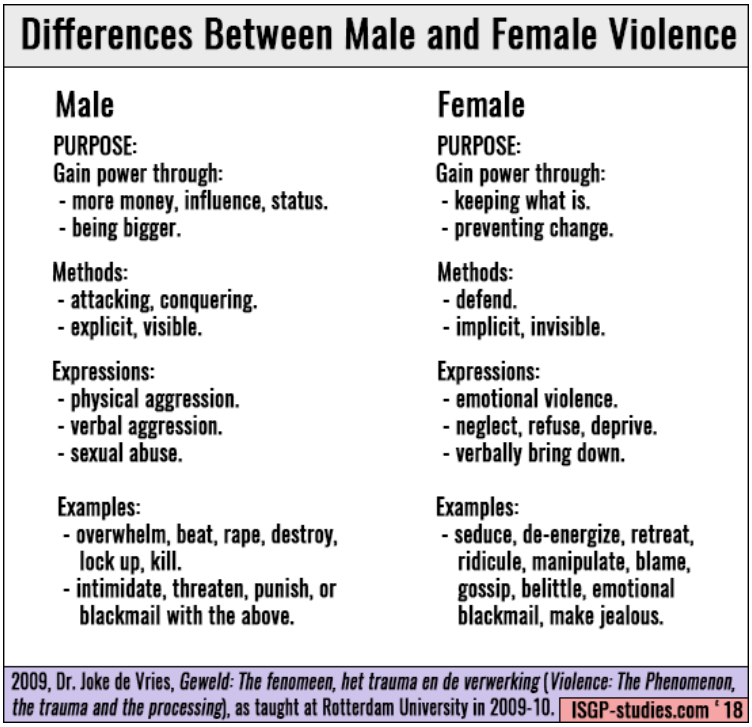
Hence, maybe it's about time to shelve the "equality" mantra. The more one thinks about it, the sillier it sounds. Maybe when we're all flying high on LSD, then we're all "equal", but down here on planet Earth, Darwin rules. We can aspire to be nice to each other and treat each other honorable as far as possible on this planet with its limited space and resources, but that's about it.

So for the love of God and Darwin, maybe see the "equality" mantra in perspective. And recognize that it is being used as propaganda. As always. The globalist movement does little else.

Female violence: manipulate, make jealous, humiliate

The following oversight is based on a course at Rotterdam University (realistically a college) related to "violence" that I took in 2010. I picked the course simply because I was lazy and late with picking one - and this was one of the handful left. I actually hoped to learn something about Dissociative Identity Disorder (DID) / Multiple Personality Disorder

(DID) in relation to ISGP's Beyond the Dutroux Affair article, because the course largely dealt with violence against children. No such luck, but already at the time - well before any "social justice awareness" - I remember being struck that the differences between male and female violence were so clearly spelled out. Despite being extremely recognizable, it already was something that you would never see in the media at that point. One wonders if this course even survived in later years. However, these teachings were based on mainstream psychology. Here's an easy-to-grasp oversight of those teachings:



Differences Between Male and Female Violence
Male
PURPOSE:
Gain power through:
- more money, influence, status.
- being bigger.
Methods:
- attacking, conquering.
- explicit, visible.
Expressions:
- physical aggression.
- verbal aggression.
- sexual abuse.
Examples:
- overwhelm, beat, rape, destroy, lock up, kill.
- intimidate, threaten, punish, or blackmail with the above.
Female
PURPOSE:
Gain power through:
- keeping what is.
- preventing change.
Methods:
- defend.
- implicit, invisible.
Expressions:
- emotional violence.
- neglect, refuse, deprive.
- verbally bring down.
Examples:
- seduce, de-energize, retreat, ridicule, manipulate, blame, gossip, belittle, emotional blackmail, make jealous.

In all fairness, I feel that this "female violence" in many situations should more be described as "female pleasure", "female fun", or "female habits".

Women more neurotic, agreeable, and withdraw-prone

Below is an oversight from a 2011 study from Canada that focused on mapping the differences in emotional make up of men and women. I reorganized the row and added some extra numbers and percentages to make these differences much easier to grasp:

Gender Differences in Personality and Interests: When, Where, and Why?

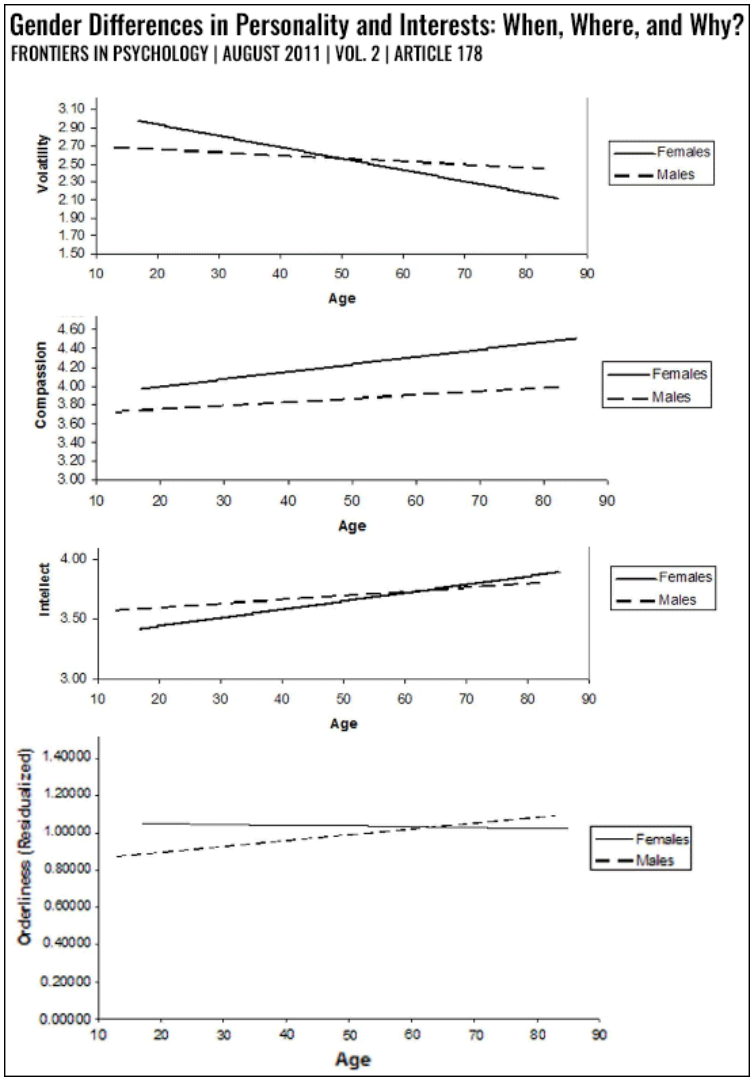
Traits-listing reorganized from largest difference to smallest by ISGP-studies.com '19

The study also concluded that men are more thing/object-oriented and women more socially-oriented.

The graphs below come from the same study as above, and are based on the same data, but now analyzed by age. The oversight shows a number of remarkable (yet recognizable) differences and evolutions for the two genders:



The data also revealed a difference between Asian and white people in terms of traits as compassion and volatility. The study didn't go into much detail on this issue, however, so we'll leave that be.

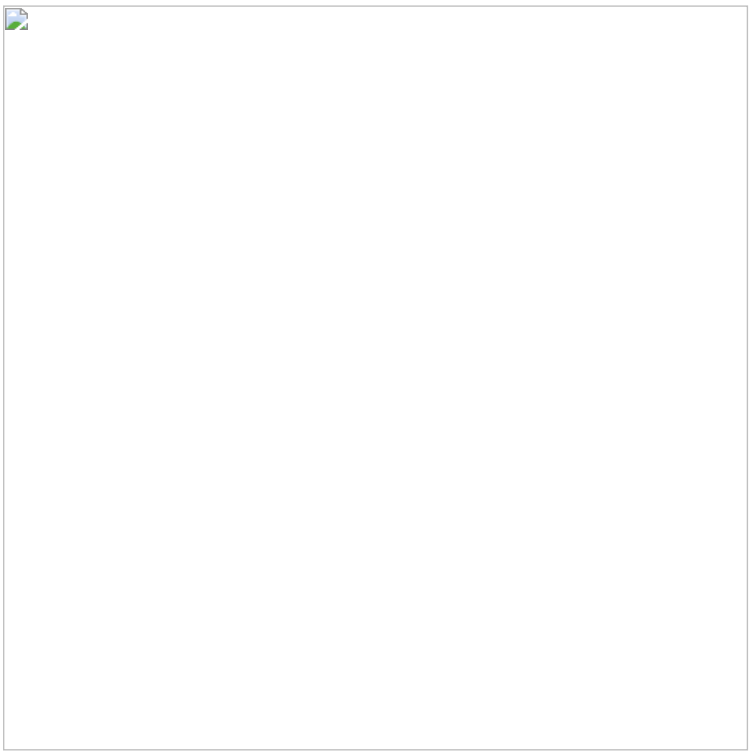
Obviously, as all the references in the full study above alone make clear, there is much more data to be found. This is all the time available for now though.

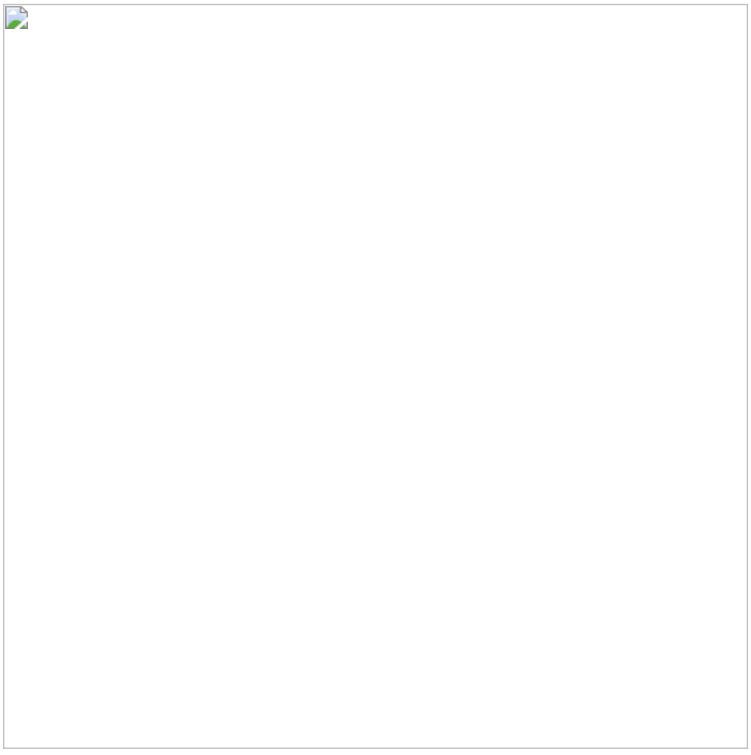
White women dating boat migrants 5 to 46x more than white men

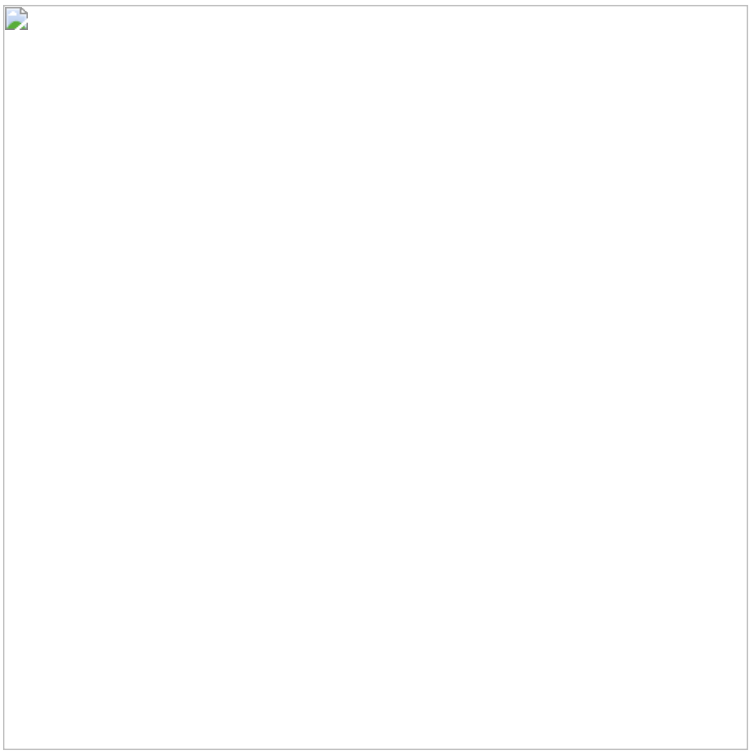
ISGP has a dedicated, unique-research article on this. The conclusion is that women love primitive, emotional, dancy, muscled, violent men, and also that due to their inability to physically defend themselves and their "agreeableness", they belong to the conquerer.

Women graduating more - but a major issue due to groupie-ism

It's regularly mentioned these days that women graduate from high school, college and university at considerably higher rates than men - and even get their driver's licenses at higher rates. Statistics do not lie:







As someone who spent (pretty much involuntarily) 1.5 years teaching at elementary schools, the cause seems quite simple: over the line, women are better behaved. At the time already, I regularly "joked" (but not really) that I would prefer to teach girls classes only. Why? Except for black girls, girls in general just behave better. Every white and certainly Arab class had boys that clearly needed to "rage": can't sit still, doesn't want to concentrate, doesn't want to listen, gets other boys to rebel with him, etc.

A full list for me, that more formal scientific studies over the line happen to agree with as well:

1. A higher percentage of girls can sit still and focus much longer. I noticed that personally all the time.
2. In contrast to boys that regularly are looking to "rebel", girls are naturally more submissive - even to the point they are unusually attracted to authority. More on that later.
3. Girls are very socially-oriented. They are not distracted by "things" - often rebellious things - as video games, computers, scooters, motorcycles, cars, etc.
4. Girls plan more. They're thinking about their dream house, their dream wedding, about dating, vacations, their dream man - and how they are all going to get it. A lot of guys don't plan at all.
5. Girls are more focused on "fitting in". It's like a survival instinct.

A formal higher education is perfect for women to a higher degree than men. It always has been. Everything is structured. Attention and good behavior is expected. It is very mental and intellectual, instead of practical and hands on, especially the first 2 years generally. It's the ultimate social adventure too: drinking, partying, spring breaks. It's everything that you "are supposed to do" and gives you status. Rebellious thinking absolutely is not desired in higher education, no matter how many times teachers and professors tell you, "We want you to learn now to think for yourself!"

So yes, women are made "equal" and all disappear to higher education. Is that a good situation though? Well, receiving a B.A., M.A., or Ph.D. is the ultimate status symbol. Even though many educations require little skill; just a decent short-term memory; now you are, "proven", "smarter" than anybody with a lower degree than you, about ANY subject. That's how it works. It generally also gives you way more ability to make money. So now you end up with a lot more "high status" women than men, that on top of that are artificially shoved into all the highest positions of government and business. Geeh, what would be the problem? The problems are well-known, of course:

> "The study described here, the first to use real-life data from a large international online dating company, shows distinct sex differences... Men with high income and education are disproportionately preferred by women. ... Women are more selective in romantic partners than men and more likely to prioritize resource-acquisition ability."[67]

Or from another study:

> "Across all sources of money, men maintained equal levels of willingness to date women - however, the level of willingness was slightly higher for earned money. ... 90 per cent of women preferred having a romantic relationship with a man who earned his money, while only 5 per cent wanted to establish a romantic relationship with a man who inherited his money. ... Individuals who have access to valuable resources are highly desirable as romantic partners, in particular to women."[68]

Ever heard of the word "groupie": i.e. thousands to millions of girls are screaming for and fawning over that one artist the media made famous? Women go crazy for status. I even experienced it personally on the handful of occasions in life that I had a little bit of it. Girls' entire demeanor and behavior just changed overnight.

My best guess is that the higher levels of education will lead to more frustrated men and women:

- Women looking to date a smaller and smaller pool of men, because historically and biologically they want to "look up" to their man, and brag about his status and achievements. Women with higher degrees now will forever look down to some degree on those "uneducated male bums", regardless of whether the man makes more money.

- A lot of women will be much more hesitant to have children, because "mommy has also got to pay the bills."
- Women being less happy, because they have less children and grandchildren, and are stuck in the workplace, like men.
- Girls going more openly for short term sexual relationships.
- Women, now largely financially independent, experimenting more with satisfying their kinky lusts: guys with big muscles, tattoos, artists, car guys, or generally dangerous, violent and forbidden men. These are things they may get tired of eventually, with the man always having to "reprove" himself - in contrast to a B.A., M.A., or Ph.D., which are automatic lifetime status-enhancing achievements.
- Many men, certainly white men, getting disillusioned with white women and the West in general. They will withdraw at higher rates from society, or try to move to eastern Europe or the Far East - until those places get wrecked too by the globalist movement.

Nothing new here. It's also due to women getting easy status and often money due to social media and Only Fans followers. All of it is sex-based, a lot of it from the Second and Third World, and from countries with extra desperation because prostitution is not allowed. One example of July 23, 2025 is seeing a girl with a combined 10 million followers on Instagram, posting one of her songs. I absolutely loved the song, Shazammed it: just 17 Shazams total. Why? They're all busy jerking off to her pictures and begging her for attention.

For the globalist movement these developments are fine, as it all looks to be about white replacement. White women get no more babies? Or mainly with boat migrants? Mission accomplished. The rest is not important.

In the end women are stepping into a matrix carved out, created and defended by men of the past several thousand years. Men are the builders of society. They designed and built the roads, bridges, skyscrapers, office buildings, chairs, and pencils women move into and use. Men designed swords, spears, tanks, machine guns, stealth fighters, communication technology - everything that allowed western society to defend itself from foreign enemies and to develop itself. The most male-dominated enrollments, to this day:

1. Engineering: 75â€“85%.
2. Computer Science / IT: 75â€“85%.

And for women:

1. Nursing: 85â€“90%.

2. Social Work: 80â€“85%.
3. Psychology: 75â€“80%.
4. Education (all levels): 70â€–80%.

What may also be mentioned is that the more women move into an education, the more men they are going to push out.

Of course, the globalist movement will do whatever it can to further destroy gender roles in every possible way, and push women as much as possible into Engineering and Computer Science / IT. Not in reverse, of course. The whole idea is to put women and Third Worlders 100% at the top of society. Why? Because Satan knows that that will end the white race.

In the end, whoever makes the most money, is boss. In fact, a man cannot really be a man unless he's able to be totally self-sufficient, divorce or not, alimony or not. But having a women is charge, and making more money than the man, good luck with the man being a man. I've seen it plenty: the man is not allowed to open his mouth on things as immigration or anything else "politically incorrect". He's not allowed to buy "his" own car, or even give advice on what car to buy, or do minor repairs himself. (you have "experts" for that) Boatloads of money get wasted on brand items and artsy interior decorating. The man is not voluntarily loving his wife. He's cuck trying to keep a roof above his head.

Women drive slow and responsible, but technically worse than (cave)men

The globalist feminist propaganda machine seldom fails to manipulate the facts into trying to make people believe that women are "equal" drivers to men - even though anyone with a car, or anyone who watches any motorsport, knows this is far from the truth. Some of the first Google results I found:

- "Remember that outdated stereotype where men were supposedly the superior drivers? ... "The best thing for men to do is adopt the same behavior as women.""[69]

- "Men, drive like a woman! That makes traffic safer... Now, I'm sure some men are reading this and think that 'the ladies' can't drive, but the reality is different. ... 84 percent of fatal traffic accidents in France are caused by male drivers [and] where drink was a factor [it's] 93 percent."[70]

- "The clichÃ© is that women are worse drivers than men, but statistics prove the opposite: they drive much more safely and are involved in fewer serious accidents... "It's [men's] testosterone's fault.""[71]

- "Male drivers made up 54 per cent of crashes on the road."[72]

- "There are more licensed female drivers in the U.S. than licensed male drivers [since 2006, with the gap growing]. But ... male drivers were involved in over 74% of fatal car accidents in the U.S. in 2021."[73]

Despite key truths, these reports also are a massive misdirection. How many female F1 or other top motorsport drivers are even remotely competing with men? That's right: zero. So luckily, a handful of car crash studies have been done revealing what every person already knows to be true:

- Male-male crashes are underrepresented, despite both driving much more aggressively than women.[74]
- Female-female crashes are overrepresented, despite both driving much more cautious than men.[75]
- Women crash disproportionally high at "crossroads, T-junctions and slip roads."[76]
- Women crash disproportionally high in parking lots.[77]
- Women disproportionally high hit walls, parked cars, unattended vehicles, and stationary vehicles, both in and outside of car parks.[78]
- Women disproportionally high reverse into other vehicles.[79]
- Women crash disproportionally high when pulling out from a parked position or when driving out of minor roads.[80]
- Women crash 26% more than men in non-fatal injury accidents.[81]
- Women crash 12% more than men in non-injury Property Damage Only accidents.[82]

Another thing that shouldn't be forgotten is that Arab immigrants into the West in particular all too often drive like absolute madman. Personal examples that already killed me almost twice on the motorcycle (I never got hit, because I anticipated the situation):

- Super-heavy speeding through narrow streets with little visiblility, or even in schoolzones - to the point it is so dangerous it melts your mind anyone would do it.
- Wheelies while lane-splitting in the city. (Saw one crash on a hired Ducati in front of my house, immediately knowing it was a Moroccan.)

- Blatantly running through red lights at 150-200% the speed limit, with perpendicular traffic already starting to move. This almost killed me twice.
- Group drifting at busy intersections, just for fun, with large groups.
- No turn signals use, although this is a wider problem too.

This doesn't mean that there are not very serious problems with men driving cars. Checking these facts is made harder because so many statistics do not take into account that men (still) spend more time on the road than women. In the U.S., in 2001 65% more, in 2009 48% more, and in 2017 still 36% more. In France, in 2024, it had gone down to just 10.4%. Since 2006, with an ever widening gap, women even are more often getting their driver's license than men. [83] This is in line with women doing better in (formal) education than men.

To illustrate the problem with men:

- Per 100,000, French male drivers roughly cause 5x more fatal car crashes than women, and 12x more drunk driving deaths than women. [84] This is based on women driving 89.6% as much as men. [85] The French only drink about 15% more alcohol than Americans per year, so I'm not sure why these numbers are so ultra-high.
- For many years, men have constituted 70-75% of all traffic accident deaths in the Netherlands. (77% in France in 2024). In addition, a decent portion of these involve motorcycles accidents. For example, 56 motorcycle deaths (98% of which are men) on 675 total motor vehicle deaths in 2024. 675 x 0.73 = 493 male deaths - 56 = 438 male deaths versus 238 female deaths. That's 1.84x more male deaths than female. If we say that men drove 12% more in 2024 than women, that would lead to a correction to 1.64Ã— for Dutch male overrepresentation in crashes per distance traveled. But how many of the deadly crashes were the fault of men? Good question. It could be somewhere around the U.S. number of 2.6x for men causing deaths due to speeding. Or is it more around 5x for the French? I don't know.
- Per 100,000, U.S. men were about 1.7Ã— and 2.1x overrepresented in deadly accidents respectively in 2001 and 2017. [86] The numbers indicate that men started driving more dangerously, although they still are a far cry from the French numbers. This does not tell you who caused the accidents, so this number is likely higher still for men.
- On average, per 100,000, U.S. men caused 2.6x more deadly car accidents due to speeding than women, from 2013 to 2021. [87]
- On average, per 100,000, U.S. men caused 1.9x more drunk driving fatalities than women, from 2013 to 2022. [88]
- Men 17% more often refuse to put on their turn signals when switching lanes. In absolute percentages for females - males: 62%

vs. 53%. The reasons given by both genders:

- Not enough time: 42%.
- Lazy: 23%.
- Because they'll forget to turn it off: 17%.
- Changing lanes too frequently: 12%.
- Not important: 11%.
- Because other drivers don't: 8%.
- "Adds excitement": 7%. [89]

Extenuating circumstances:

- There are none though for not turning on your turn signal. It should be heavily fined.
- There also are none for insane overrepresentation numbers ranging in the 5 to 12 times for France - apparently. Well, maybe if the overwhelming majority of men die in street races without any innocents getting hurt. Not sure how likely that is.

- Traffic deaths in general are not overly high. About 650 in the Netherlands annually on a population of 17 million: 1 in 26,154, and these are not fully random. Traffic-related deaths per 100,000, annually: 42.2 in Zimbabwe, 32 in Thailand, 27 in Iraq, 22 in Iran, 13 in the U.S., 5.3 in Canada, 5 in France, 4.2 in the Netherlands, 3.4 in Germany, 2.1 in Norway.
- One big question is what the percentage of blacks, Arabs, Indians and Latinos are in car crashes, compared to whites. Their driving often is many times more dangerous.
- How many were males killing themselves in street races? If there were victims, were these innocent bystanders or fellow racers? Or innocent families and females?
- Street racing is loads of fun and dominated by 90% or more by men. As long as you don't take any innocents with you, it's a much more noble death than cancer or Parkinson.
- Many crash databases look at all types of motor vehicles, including motorcycles: dominated for over 90% by speeding men (so mostly "their fault") that have about 3.5x higher chance of crashing [90] and, depending on the study, 22 [91] to 30 times [92] higher chance of dying in a crash per distance traveled than a persons driving a car. 96% of Belgian motorcycle deaths are men. [93] 98% in the Neterlands. [94]

So yes, men can be pretty dangerous on the road, in particular Third World immigrants - but techically and biologically they not "worse drivers" than women. And that's what the point is here.

LGBTQ increase: driven by (often hot) bisexual girls

The number of people who consider themselves LGBTQ, at least in the United States, has gone up every year and is mainly driven by millennials: those born between 1980 and 1999 (and obviously later as well).

The total average LGBTQ numbers in a May 2018-published Gallop poll were 3.5% in 2012, 4.1% in 2016 and 4.8% by 2018, with the number for millennials standing at 5.8% for 2012 and 8.2% for 2018. Older generations were steady: Traditionalists (born pre-1946) stand around 1.4%, Baby Boomers (1946-1964) around 2.5%, and generation X (1965-1979) around 3.5%. [95]

The term LGBTQ doesn't mean much though, looking at the huge increase in acceptance of lesbian/bisexual girls since Facebook and Instagram have come around. It literally looks as if every hot, openly sexual girl is at least bisexual. Needless to say, between 2012 and 2017, the LGBTQ percentage for girls increased from 3.5% to 5.1% (a 46% increase), with men only increasing from 3.4% to 3.9% (a 15% increase). [96] Almost hilariously, the Gallop demographer explained to the media:

> "While this trend has been observed in several large surveys, there's not much research to explain what's behind the gender disparity." [97]

In short, the LGBTQ community is mainly a gay and lesbian/bisexual community. Its increase is heavily driven by women "discovering" their bisexual nature, but with seemingly primarily the depressed short-haired fatties with purple hairdo going out to protest.

Under all circumstances, the transgender element is much smaller.

Lifelong transgenders: 1 in 250 or less

As can be seen in the previous section, there's a difference between LGBTQ activism and transgender activism, with the latter basically being its most extreme subset. With all the extremist transgender pushing that Hollywood is doing, it is pretty clear that globalist elites are of the opinion they need to actively raise the number of transgenders in society. For now though, the fact is that large-sample research of the Williams Institute, published in June 2016 and featured in the New York Times, reveals that about 0.6% (1 in 166) of U.S. individuals consider themselves to be transgender. [98] In 2017 this same institute estimated that about 0.73% (1 in 137) U.S. teenagers identified as transgender. [99]

In December 2017, hours before it was set to broadcast, Canada's CBC canceled a BBC documentary entitled Transgender Kids: Who Knows Best?. Why? Because Ph.D. transgender activist Joshua M. Ferguson, a contributor to "liberal CIA" outlets as The Huffington Post, Buzzfeed and

The Daily Beast, tweeted that the documentary contains "misinformation", is "harmful" to "non-binary" people (genderqueer; neither male nor female), and will feed "transphobia". [100]

James M. Cantor, PhD, dug into the controversy at Psypost.org [101], based on an earlier analysis of 12 historic transgender studies - all available, ranging from 1972 to 2013 - that he summarized in a January 11, 2016 post on his blog sexologytoday.org. [102] All these studies tracked children who believed they were transgender into adulthood, to figure out how many of them abstained from these beliefs later in life. The following numbers came out:

1. 75% of 16 subjects stopped feeling transgender (1972).
2. 88% of 16 subjects (1978).
3. 100% of 16 subjects (1979).
4. 96% of 45 subjects (1984)
5. 90% of 10 subjects (1986).
6. 98% of 44 subjects (1987)
7. 100% of 8 subjects (1987).
8. 61% of 54 subjects (2008).
9. 88% of 25 subjects.(2008).
10. 88% of 139 subjects (2012).
11. 59% of 129 subjects (2013).*
12. 69% average for three 54 to 139 subject studies over 2008-2013.
13. 60% minimum average for 2008 and 2013 studies. [103]

*Study reports 63% by labeling the missing 24 out of 129 subjects as "desisted (to be transgender)", in part because none of those 24 proceeded with a (free) sex change. By excluding this group a percentage of 54% is reached. This author opted for the middle ground: the average of 54% and 63%: 59%.

Manufacturing trannies: 60-98% desistence rate, yet transgender surgery from age 12

The above studies show a 60 to 98 percent of desistence rate for transgenders, who already traditionally make up around 1 in 130 or less. This usually involves children who desist later in their teens or in their 20s - when they "grow up".

That brings up the question why in particular since 2015 transgender surgeries in the United States have been performed on children as young as 12. They went from 3.7 in 2013, to 1 in 2014, to 47.7 per 100,000 in 2022. They all involve girls transitioning to boys by the way [104], as boys are just put on hormones - for now.

It should be clear that every statistic shows that the number of young people in particular who consider themselves transgender is going up every year. That's not so strange in an age where it is an act of rebellion to say that there are only two genders.

One of the most important conclusions to draw from this research - and this really shouldn't have been necessary in the first place - is that the recent trend of transgender pushing on young children by their parents is highly unnatural. The other conclusion is that the globalist movement is looking to create as many transgenders as possible, holding them in higher regard than "feminist" women, and certainly any white men. The tens of millions being poured annually in transgender protest groups by the "liberal CIA" foundations shows as much as well.

Hollywood's tranny kids epidemic

Already in 2018 ISGP produced its "liberal CIA" Hollywood article, among other things wondering why so many actors in Hollywood are raising transsexual children. Or, in some cases, tranny, adopted black kids. It's something to behold. Names include:

1. Angelina Jolie: Her biological daughter with Brad Pitt.
2. Charlize Theron: One of her black adopted sons.
3. Megan Fox: All three sons, from birth; plus an activist gay stepson. Everybody in Megan's vicinity besides former husband Brian has visibly worn dresses at one point or another: MGK, Post Malone (Nirvana-style), Yungblud, and Jxdn. A lot of this has to do with "punk music" being pro-LGBTQ antifa music: Men wearing dresses is "cool" and "rebellious". Seriously.
4. Elon Musk: His son Xavier, who became Vivian, as well as his antifa political nemesis. Musk has dated and had children with countless actresses.
5. Will Smith: His son Jaden Smith wears dresses and has been seen in "sus" embraces with Justin Bieber. Will and wife Jada are Scientologists who once had a partnership with the Rockefeller Foundation.
6. Kate Hudson: Announced years back that her daughter Rani would be raised "genderless".
7. Kendall Jenner: Her father, the former athlete Bruce/Caitlyn Jenner. Dress-wearing boyfriend Bad Bunny and friend Lewis Hamilton are other noteworthy examples, but likely mainly are living out their kinks and doing what's good for their career. Kylie Jenner has operated a staple of transsexual and gay make up assistants, although that is pretty much the norm for male assistants in Hollywood. They're all gay.
8. Madonna: Her black adopted son David Banda.
9. Tobey Maguire: His son Otis. Best friend of Leonardo DiCaprio.

People can read the details over in the Hollywood article, but the June 2023 Megan Fox affair over dressing her three boys in dresses proved that the entirety of the media and politics support unlimited transsexual perversion in society. Anyone can just dress their boys from birth into pink tutus and knotted up t-shirts, and it is only "celebrated".

Gender wage gap? Only 2.5% all things being equal

A huge issue pushed by the media these days, especially in the United States, and even more so since the 2015-2016 election campaign between Trump and Hillary Clinton, is the claim that (white) women are being underpaid by about 20% compared to (white) men. [105] In Europe the average was 16% in 2018. [106] In general, the wage gap strongly declined between the 1960s and 2000, but from there stagnated. [107]

It should be clear by now that just about any narrative financed and pushed by the globalist movement, is a perversion. The perversion here, from the start, is ignoring that women's role for tens of thousands of years to a large extent has been to birth and take care of children. Unless maybe you live in a communist country, their role has not been to waste away in a factory or a cubicle. That part of the debate is all too often ignored by our multinational-funded cultural communist superclass movement. Instead, it is suggested that women can only have any kind of self-respect if they work full-time. It all fits perfectly with the white replacement agenda and the perversion of gender roles in general. The more "excited" and "useful" women can be made about their "career", the less babies they will have.

Most of the talk is about "annual" or "lifetime" income, which is completely pointless. [108] The main thing you need to know is how much a man and a woman of similar education, rank and experience make on an hourly basis in a wide variety of jobs. Try to find that. It's hard. But if there are discrepancies here, you can address them. These discrepancies certainly have existed.

The main issue simply is that women get pregnant and leave the workforce. That's why in 2015 it was found out that "childless, unmarried women earn 96 cents for every dollar a man earns" [109]; then in their 20s and 30s build up a huge wage gap; but eventually in their finish start closing the gap again. [110] 2015 and 2016 studies by PayScale show that there wasn't much of an issue either, if all things are equal, with only 20% of women being of the opinion that their gender played a role in a missed promotion [111]:

> "Controlled data (comparing men and women with similar job type, education and experience, holding similar positions) show that > women earn 98 cents on the dollar compared with men, or just 2.4 percent less (down from last year's 2.7 percent gap), according to the firm\'s 2016 Inside the Gender Pay Gap report."[112]

At a career-tiger level, a study with MBA graduates revealed the following:

> "Women earned an average salary of $115,000 right out of graduate school, while men earned $130,000. [But] men also averaged a few more weekly hours and a bit more prior experience as they entered the workforce. ... Nine years into their careers, women saw their salaries rise to an average of $250,000 â€" while men's salaries averaged out at $400,000. Men were earning 60 percent more than women."[113]

The reason was explained by one of the economists carrying out the study:

> "The highest-paying jobs disproportionately reward those who can work the longest, least flexible hours. These types of job penalize workers who have caregiving responsibilities outside the workplace. ... The gender gap in pay would be considerably reduced and might even vanish [if this wasn't the case]."[114]

This also is also why the wage gap "starts to shrink as a woman enters her 40s and 50s."[115]

Does this mean there are no issue? No. It is certain that women are less likely to negotiate their salary, but at the same time that employers are less interested in paying them just as much as men. So women indeed seem to often be low-balled. [116] Looking at all the controversy in the media though about this, this issue seems largely fixed. If it even is a fix.

The gender wage gap, despite being minor in case of everything being equal, still is a complex issue. It really depends on the type of job, the experience, etc. to make any comments about it.

There certainly is an equal problem with employers just paying everybody with the same rank and education the same wage, despite some workers being much better, more dedicated, or more experienced and knowledgable than all the rest. That too is causing a lot of frustration, but you don't hear politicians about that.

2.5% less wage, but more sick, and less versatile

Another thing you don't hear politicians about is that there even are professions where you could easily argue that women should not be allowed or should earn considerably less than what men make.

For example, we're paying male and female police officers "equal", yet any female police officer always needs to be accompanied by a male, because realistically not even 5 female police officers are going to subdue 1 male criminal of any size who has no intention to allow it. That's not something politicians want to talk about. I'm super-sympathic to female police officers and army recruits, but experience tells me that I don't really want to engage in any dangerous, dirty operations with them. And certainly not bet my live on them. Call it an opinion, but women are too weak, too sensitive, too emotional, too apathic, and too clumsy for me to trust them to have my back. I want to trust them, but experience tells me it's extra, extra dangerous. Even beyond that, you have a personal issue with one of them, and they'll all let you die.

Then there's the issue that women, including all the hottie police officers, are going to be too sexually attracted to many of the "alpha male" black and Arab criminals, despite them verbally abusing them all the time. So I have to be the "beta" white knight, while half the time their pussies are getting wet from the people I'm trying to "protect" them from. No thank you. I just think it's cute female police officers like adventure, and bang them for it. That's it. Hire another 2-3 female police officers for this male refusing to sign up because of "feminism" - and "diversity".

On a personal level, I'd say the big issue with hiring women for my company is that they get pregnant, sometimes quite a lot. They're gone for months on end and you have got to find a temporary replacement, possibly having to spent a lot of time working in these temporary recruits. That's just with office or teaching jobs. If they move outside of that, there are additional problems. Women:

1. are smaller;
2. are weaker;
3. are more breakable;
4. have slower reaction times;
5. are more clumsy with a lot of physical work;
6. are less versitile when it comes to moving the business, or repairing the workplace;
7. can't handle threatening or other stressful situations as well;
8. have trouble taking the lead, especially among men, and especially not in informal situations;
9. are more emotional and can be way harder to deal with for a man, and maybe even a woman;
10. are more agreeable, meaning they also don't voice their (often much needed) misgivings;
11. make up what they lack in boldness with gossiping, lying and manipulating;

12. are more hesitant in solving practical problems, or initiating a "course change" in case this is much needed;
13. have way different interests than men;
14. possibly distract the men too much, or force men to talk about issues they are uncomfortable with (family, dates, social activities, etc.);
15. open the door to sex at the workplace and jealousy;
16. open you and your male workers up to "harassment" lawsuits;
17. etc.

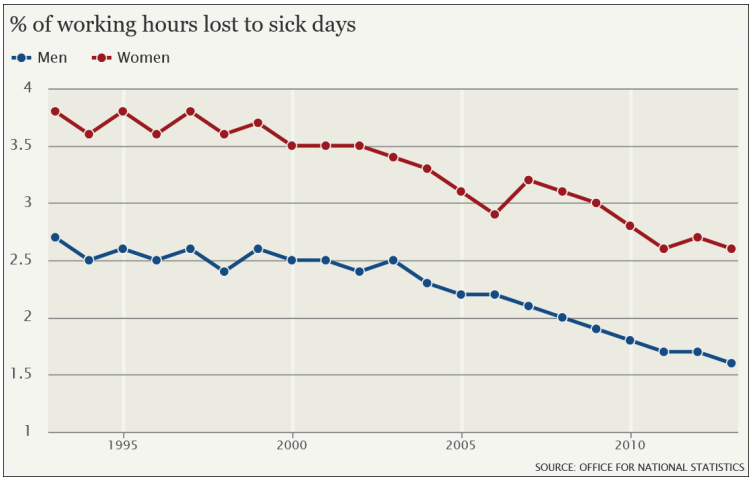
And THEN, on top of all that... they get pregnant. Possibly multiple times. Mind you, I'm only analyzing white women compared to white men. If I observe the "work ethic", friendliness, and "professionalism" of the average Third World immigrant worker, or the shocking lack thereof, I only get annoyed that any white person has to accept the exact same slave wage - or really that the former is even allowed into the country.

Now, I personally am always willing to give enthusiastic, capable women a chance in the workplace. She may actually be my preference. She may actually greatly improve the mood at the workplace - which I've seen with my own eyes. In contrast to the propaganda, men actually worship women who are better at something "male" than they are, even more so when they are attractive. Motorcycle stunt rider Sarah Lezito, for example, is worshipped by plenty of men. It's just extremely rare. And in case that is the case they usually were taught by a man, or overseen by them in the background.

However, I mostly want women home with 3, 4, 5, 6 white kids, in a roomy house, so they can save western society. Part-time work is more than fine for a woman, and they should get paid just as much as a man if they do a similarly good job. For the rest, they need a man to take care of them.

Above is just what I personally came up with in a matter of minutes. Below is a list of published facts regarding men and women at home and at the work place.:

- Women get pregnant, sometimes 2, 3, 4, or 5 times, meaning you are missing an employee for at least several months. This needs no sourcing.
- In Finland, between 2002 and 2005, women between the ages of 40 and 60 were found to call in sick 46% more often than men. With all potential additional factors excluded, the percentage stood at about 33% higher. [117]
- A historic Office of Labor Statistics graph on sick leave for men and women shows:



- A 2011 study showed that women on average take 189 sick days during their career, with men 140: 35% more. [118] In the 25 to 35 age bracket, women call in sick about twice as much: 4.3 percent sick days compared to 2.2 percent for men. [119] At least some of this heigtened sick leave seems to be due to child birth complications as pelvis instability, and also because women with children are 3.5 times more likely to call in sick to stay with their sick child than men. [120]
- As a 2013-published Pew poll shows, over 1997-2012, 47% of women thought it ideal to work part-time, 25% "not at all", leaving 27% preferring a full-time job. [121]
- In November 2012, 53% of married mothers with children under 18 thought it ideal to work part-time, 25% preferred "not at all", leaving 23% with an interest in working full-time. [122]
- Women are strongly represented in jobs with a lot of employee benefits, primarily maternity leave and even shared parental leave, which in order are the most accessible in the legal, government bureacrat, financial services, media, and biotech and pharmaceutical fields. [123] Male-dominated sectors do not score well here.
- Even after women have made use of their maternity leave, "the majority of women, post maternity leave, consciously decide to reduce their career ambitions and progressions, as family now becomes their highest priority." [124] This steers them towards jobs that offer limited and flexible working hours at the expense of higher pay, also hourly pay. [125]
- A 2013 poll shows that 74% of people thinks it's harder for "parents to raise children" when the woman is working outside the home. 19% (demographics of this vote please) thinks it's easier. [126]
- In a 2013 a Pew poll confirmed traditional gender role acceptance, certainly for the man: "51% of survey respondents say that children are better off if a mother is home and doesnâ€™t hold a job, while just 8% say the same about a father." 34% of respondents said a child is "just as well off" when the mother "works", albeit many probably refer to flexible, part-time work. [127]

- A 2019-published study from England shows that full-time working mothers with one child have 18% more chronic stress, and 40% more with two children. Only a reduction of working hours reduces the stress. [128]

- In 2016, 10% of American men reported to work 60+ hours per week. Only 3% of women reported doing so. 28% of men worked 50-59 hours per week, versus 16% of women. [129]
- In 2012, 92% of work-related deaths in the United States involved men. I Australia it was 96%, and in Canada from 1993 to 2005 it was 97%. [130] - making it clear they take the more dangerous, physically demanding jobs.
- Men feel pressure to be the financial caretaker. For women this is just a bonus. They primarily feel responsibility to raise their children.
- Apart from law, psychology and medicine, more men are drawn to jobs as engineering and computer programming that pay better, scale better and require different beta-skillsets.
- Lots of women are drawn to elementary school education, which does not pay and scale well.

To summarize, it's largely a non-sensical debate. Even in the mid 2010s, when the gender pay gap became a major political debate, it wasn't much of an issue with fully equal work and experience - based on an hourly wage. Looking at the increased sick rates for women and them being less diverse in their employment, it appears that statistically there is no gap to speak of, except in individual cases.

Many of the issues come down to (white) women eventually having children, something that the cultural communist globalist movement doesn't want to happen. Women are not to be worker drones "equal" to men. They have babies to raise, ideally 3 or more. Ideally men aren't worker drones either. But certainly with women this is just an utopia of the globalist movement.

This whole article may sound "anti-woman". They could well have benefits, such as better at following instructions and lower crime, meaning less stealing from the boss. In the end it just depends on the job offered, and the biological desire to have a family.

APPENDICES

Am I a "feminist"? What women did for me...

I left this out initially, but after reading Friedrich Nietzsche's comments about women (see the 'Omissions' chapter), I decided to put this section back:

Am I a "feminist"? Well, not in the Soros or "liberal CIA" sense. I would like women to have an education similar to men, with mixed classes. Is it a good idea for society in the long run? I don't know. Let me make a list of positive and less positive experiences with women throughout my life.

Positive things women have done for me:

1. Happily supplying endless sexual gratification, for me especially at a distance.
2. Fun, often sexual cat-and-mouse games, for me especially at a distance.
3. Make life more beautiful and sexy, in no small part with make up and fake breasts.
4. Having a nice, attractive girl around makes you feel great.
5. Cook well.
6. Clean well.

Less positive things women have done for/to me:

1. Major enforcers of political correctness. In line with this: extra dedicated slaves to whatever (corrupt) authority is around.
2. Very emotional and volatile, which can be a problem in particular when having to deal with them in the workplace on equal footing or as a superior.
3. Massively attracted to anything with more status and money than them.
4. Keep playing at a distance until you magically make the amount of money they desire, in a stable manner.
5. "Copy" a few billion-dollar ideas - and make a billion-plus doing so, not paying you a dime, but continuing to demand your attention.
6. Don't act on any other related billion dollar private works of mine, despite having the money, the connections, and being greatly obsessed with everything I'm creating.
7. Give me looks of contempt for not being interesting enough, not talking enough, or not working - despite being quietly obsessed, mainly due to my online work. Or completely swing the other way 6 months later for doing something they like.
8. As mentors, manipulate and kick me off college educations, because I'm unable to be social enough due to a bunch of not-easily-seen health issues. With guys this is far less of an issue, because they'll just accept "the quiet guy" if for the rest he's friendly.
9. Look at me with contempt if I finally mention a few health issues - because it messes with their idea of the "perfect man".

10. Punishing me for telling the truth. For example: a teacher not having control over a class and telling other teachers they need to step in - for the good of the kids who do want to learn. "Not done. Not your place. Let's just not do anything."
11. Complain to authorities behind my back, never saying a word in person.
12. As manager, run the business I work for into the ground by not trying to change course.
13. Make false charges when it becomes necessary for them to remain financially stable, washing their hands in total innocence.
14. Female judges and prosecutors twice getting me blatantly falsely convicted - with superbad, obsessive intent. And anything from the Bar Association to parliament covering up for them.
15. I've overheard a woman publicly complain to her friends about her husband: "The cancer medication is making him sleepy all the time. What good is he to me now?" From the sounds of it, she was seriously looking for a divorce.
16. Put my life in danger by consistently driving with way too great a speed difference over the middle lane compared with cars to the right, not moving a lane to the left to create some space. Online I've seen a number of men engage in this activity, but in person I've only had a woman display this lack of insight.

17. Being extremely "proud girlies" by doing all the above.

So in all fairness, am I thrilled with the effects of feminism? In practice, not really. But it remains a tough issue. Men aren't always ideal either. Positives of men - for a man:

1. More outspoken about everything.
2. Far less chance of getting stabbed in the back in "loyalty situations", due to there being no sexual, status, or having-to-raise-a-family component either.
3. Less political correctness.
4. More in control of their emotions.
5. No need to "behave" all the time, as humor and general expression tend to be more compatible.
6. You can play sports with them on equal footing.
7. All this even goes for the majority of gay men.

So, men - and I'm only talking about white men - are safer to be around for this guy. And safer to work with. But they may not necessarily be more fun to have around. It really depends on the persons and the group. But certainly without women, life can be boring and pointless. And likely vice versa too.

So in the end, maybe I don't have much advice. Focusing on money is safe, and never fully trusting any woman to not try to steal it, is too. In the long run, accept that you are alone forever, and just try to be yourself. The more you manage to do that (despite insecurities, money issues, and health issues), the more you likely will have the company of both men and women. Being funny, primitive and shameless can be a great plus for men - if that natural fits you, both in looks and character. But you will always be walking a tight rope with women and in the modern feminist age.

- Group was found by ISGP after looking up visitors of the Clinton Global Initiative (CGI). Actress Freida Pinto, known from movies as Slumdog Millionaire (2008) and Rise of the Planet of the Apes (2011), visited the the Clinton Global Initiative in 2015 as an ambasador of Girl Rising. A little additional checking revealed that Girl Rising was involved in protests against Donald Trump. Financing for Girl Rising comes from many of the usual suspects, many of them represented at the CGI (Cisco, Ford Foundation, Goldman Sachs, Unilever, Microsoft, Google, Brookings Institution, etc.)

- Girl Rising is not not focused on general western feminism, but rather in globalist feminism, putting huge emphasis on open borders to the Third World and feminism for people in Third World countries.

League of Women Voters

- lwv.org/history (accessed: February 2, 2017): "The League of Women Voters was founded by Carrie Chapman Catt in 1920..."
- Immediately before the 2016 Trump-Clinton election the League of Women Voters effectively blocked three states from implementing a measure in which citizens had to prove they were prove they actually are citizens:
  - September 10, 2016, Reuters, 'Appeals Court blocks Kansas, Alabama, Georgia on voter ID rule': "A U.S. Court of Appeals on Friday blocked an effort by Alabama, Georgia and Kansas for voters to furnish proof of citizenship when registering at the polls, which opponents say disenfranchises voters, especially minorities.
    The decision effectively strikes down a rule that requires voters in the three states to provide proof they are United States citizens. Elsewhere, voters only need swear that they are citizens in order to cast a ballot.
    "With just weeks to go before a critical presidential election, we are grateful to the court of appeals for stopping this thinly veiled discrimination in its tracks," Chris Carson, president of the League of Women Voters, which had sued to block the new requirements, said in a statement.
    Conservatives in Republican-controlled states have moved to tighten voter identification rules ahead of the Nov. 8 election.
    Supporters say tougher rules help prevent fraud, but in-person voter impersonation on election day is virtually non-existent, a 2012 study at Arizona State University showed. Opponents, mostly Democrats, say the rules discriminate against minorities.
    Seven percent of Americans do not have proof of U.S. citizenship such as a birth certificate, according to the Brennan Center for Justice at New York University School of Law.
    The Appeals Court of the District of Columbia said the League of Women Voters had shown there would be irreparable harm if the rule was permitted, and had also shown it was likely to win the case on its merits."

Planned Parenthood Foundation of America

- Founded in 1921 as the American Birth Control League (ABCL) by Morgan, Carnegie and Rockefeller favorite Margaret Sanger. In 1923 the ABCL founded the first legal birth control clinic, the Clinical Research Bureau (CRB). After having served as president of the ABCL from 1921-1928, Sanger was forced out by the board. However, Sanger took the CRB with her, along with key financiers. The ABCL eventually died a quiet death.
  Sanger renamed her now spun off CRB the Birth Control Clinical Research Bureau. Her financial patrons helped the Bureau through the great depression and in 1939 became the Birth Control Federation of America - which in 1942 was renamed to Planned Parenthood Foundation of America.
  - 2005, Vicki Cox, 'Margaret Sanger', pp. 73, 80-84: "[Margaret Sanger] admitted knowing racial labor leaders, including Emma Goldman. But she struck back saying, "I also know Mrs. Andrew Carnegie and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. ..." ...
    Sanger planned another conference, the Geneva Population Conference, for August 31, 1927. It was a mammoth undertaking. She flitted around Europe... She brought in scientists and academics from around the world to study population growth, funding the gathering with grants from J. D. Rockefeller, other wealthy benefactors, and, of course, Slee.

A shock awaited Sanger on their return to New York. The American Birth Control League's Board of Directors wanted Sanger to have less control of the organization. ... The directors took over much of Sanger's power... Fed up, Sanger resigned as president on June 12, 1928. ... The board ... underestimated Sanger's importance to the organization. Along with Sanger, J. Noah Slee resigned as the League's treasurer and chief benefactor. ... The League was never financially sound again. Sanger, however, refused to give up control of the Birth Control Clinical Research Bureau [of the League]. ... Remarkably, the Bureau was scarcely affected by the Great Depression. Sanger's contacts with the Rockefellers, J.P. Morgan, and, of course, J. Noah Slee kept it afloat.

- From the very beginning Planned Parenthood was backed by Eastern Establishment money, most notably by the Morgan, Rockefeller and Carnegie family. Early trustees include Carola Warburg Rothschild, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. John M. Schiff (of the Baker family, who were key Morgan partners), Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont Jr. (key J.P. Morgan partner) and Mrs. Thomas S. Lamont (also a key J.P. Morgan partner). Others involved include (additional) Pilgrims Society members William H. Draper Jr. (special international consultant and vice chair), Alfred Ogden (trustee) and Alexis Coudert (director for 25 years). In addition, the Du Pont family has been extremely prominent in Planned Parenthood.

- Officially I can't tie this key Women's March project to a major establishment (at the moment), but a few minutes looking into this supposedly grassroots project reveal hints that it may not have been grassroots at all. As usual, the two founders, Krista Suh and Jayna Zweiman, went to the top Eastern Establishment universities (Harvard and Colombia), with Zweiman having been a contributor to "liberal CIA" outfit/Soros front the Huffington Post in 2012:

Women's March

- Founded in January 2017 to coincide with the Donald Trump presidential inauguration. While originally meant to be a protest group against sexism and anti-abortionists (in light of the Trump election) founded in January 2017 right before the inauguration of Donald Trump, the Women's March (on Washington) came to include groups revolving around transgenders (Transgender Law Center, National Center for Transgender Equality), global warming (because Trump doesn't want to acknowledge the issue), rent-a-skeptics (American Atheists, Center for Inquiry, etc.; to counter the Christian conservative influence on Trump), guns (New Yorkers Against Gun Violence), and pro-Third World immigration (for Trump's stance against unrestrained Third World immigration).
- The Women's March and partner groups also established international protests.
- A huge amount of partner groups participating in the Women's March are backed by the major Eastern Establishment foundations. We're not just talking about the Open Society Foundations of George Soros (which receives the most attention by far), but also the Ford Foundation, Carnegie Corporation, MacArthur Foundation, Packard Foundation and even media corporations as CNN, CBS, ABC and others. All feminist groups listed here are financed by these elements and also belonged to the Women's March.

ADDITIONAL FEMINIST / LGBTQ GROUPS

Black LGBTQIA+ Migrant Project

- Founded in 2017 with a Soros grant at the Ford Foundation-backed Transgender Law Center.
- Financing:
  - December 13, 2017, transgenderlawcenter.org, 'Black LGBTQIA+ Migrant Project launches to build community power': *"The Black LGBTQIA+ Migrant Project (BLMP), a first-of-its-kind program housed at Transgender Law Center and made possible by a 2017 Open Society Foundations Soros Justice Fellowship... Day Without a Woman protest

- Strike action held on March 8, 2017, on International Women's Day. It asked that women not work that day to protest the policies of the administration of Donald Trump.
- March 8, 2017, Fox News, "Day Without a Woman' supporters got $246M from Soros': "Schools in at least four states canceled classes so teachers and staff members could participate in "Day Without a Woman" demonstrations. ... The strike was created by the same organizers of the historic Women's March on Washington in January...
  Of the march's 544 partners, 100 groups received funding from Soros that totaled $246 million, according to the conservative Media Research Center. Such groups included Planned Parenthood, the Center for American Progress and People for the American Way (PFAW), the report claims."

Erasmus Pride

- Pride activist group at the Rotterdam Erasmus University that was responsible for successfully lobbying the university board in introducing "gender neutral" restrooms. Far from all students, both boys and girls, were happy with this, respectively mainly looking at it as awkward and unsafe.
  - May 2, 2024, YouTube upload by 'Omroep PowNed', 'Studenten in opstand tegen genderneutrale wc's op Erasmus uni!': " [Nawin Ramcharan, member University Council:] So that is Erasmus Pride. They have lobbied for this with the university. And the university has gone along with it."

- Erasmus Pride essentially is an organ of Erasmus University. However, among its four "partners" (funding is not known) - two of them being the Erasmus University - there also is Nike. The Warren Buffett family's NoVo Foundation has been pumping multi-millions annually into the Nike Foundation, with Nike's founder, chair, and CEO Philip Knight, having been a regular visitor of the Sun Valley Meetings, alongside Buffett and Bill Gates, another "liberal CIA" partner of Buffett:

Lambda Legal / Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund

- Non profit law firm / civil rights organization that focuses on protecting lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) communities. The organization has offices throughout the U.S.
- Lambda Legal was added after reading the following report, after which any Soros/"liberal CIA" ties were looked up:
  - April 15, 2018, The Guardian, 'David Buckel, prominent New York LGBT lawyer, dies after setting himself on fire': "A prominent gay rights lawyer and environmental advocate has burned himself to death in New York on Saturday, reportedly using fossil fuel in a protest against ecological destruction. ...
    The New York Times said it received an emailed copy of the note, which said: â€œMost humans on the planet now breathe air made unhealthy by fossil fuels, and many die early deaths as a result â€“ my early death by fossil fuel reflects what we are doing to ourselves.â€ ...
    Buckel was the lead attorney in a lawsuit regarding Brandon Teena, a transgender man who was murdered in Nebraska. Hilary Swank won an Academy Award for her portrayal of Teena in the 1999 film Boys Don't Cry.
    Buckel also served as marriage project director at Lambda Legal, a national organisation that fights for LGBT rights, where he was the strategist behind same-sex marriage cases in New Jersey and Iowa."
- Donors/partners:

Pussy Riot

- Russian feminist protest punk rock group (antifa), founded in August 2011 in Moscow. Grew out of a political protest/performance art collective named Voina ("War"). The group staged unauthorized performances around town, singing about feminism, LGBTQ rights, and in opposition to Putin and the Orthodox Catholic church he is allied with. All in all it has about a dozen members.
- The three leading members of the group - Nadezhda Tolokonnikova (Nadya Tolokno, the most famous and attractive; married to Pussy Riot co-founder Peter Verzilov), Maria Alyokhina, Yekaterina Samutsevich - were arrested in March 2012 for public hooliganism. Samutsevich was released in October 2012. The former two only in December 2013.
  - July 27, 2012, The Guardian, 'Pussy Riot: stars get behind jailed Russian punk band as trial looms': "US rockers Faith No More started the trend by inviting members of the [Pussy Riot] group that remain free to join them on stage during a performance at Moscow's Stadium Live club. This was followed by Glasgow band Franz Ferdinand, California rockers Red Hot Chili Peppers ["liberal CIA"] and Sting ["liberal CIA"], who all issued messages of support."

- Pussy Riot continued its protests over the years:
  - December 15, 2015, LonelyPlanet.com, 'Pussy Riot to open women-only museum in Montenegro': *"[It's] called New Balkan Women's Museum. It will employ only female staff and and promote only wo*men artists."

- Many historic U.S. punk bands are elite-tied antifa. Russia's Pussy Riot is the same. Whatever its exact origins, key members have been fully backed by the establishment and integrated with western "liberal CIA" networks.
- Promoted at the "liberal CIA"-financed Sundance Film Festival with the documentary Pussy Riot: A Punk Prayer (2013).
- The daughter of Bolivian billionaire Gustavo Cisneros (a very close friend of the Rockefellers through their Museum of Modern Art (MoMa), the 1001 Club, etc.), Adriana Cisneros, has been involved with peculiar Clinton/Podesta-allied Satanic artist Marina Abramovic at the time of MoMa's 2014 Zero Tolerance: Miami exhibit, in which familiar names as Yoko Ono and Pussy Riot turned up:

- U.S. antifa and gender activist who died for Putin's Russia on April 4, 2024. It appears he moved into Russia to meet up with members of the hippie â€œRainbow Familyâ€, of which he had attended a Rainbow Gathering in Georgia. He told his high-level CIA parents about this, also about moving to Russia. Apparently his primary interest was attracting money to set up an environmental group in Russia. Something may have gone wrong, as the day his Russian visa expired in September 2023, is the day he ended up at a Russian military recruitment center.
- Raging Davos-type (due to his support of BRICS and the "multipolar world") anti-imperialist, anti-U.S., anti-Israel antifa since at least his university days, where he was involved in "gender equality and environmental protest circles."

- Sep. 26, 2022 YouTube upload by 'Executive Mosaic', 'Executive Interview: CIAâ€™s Juliane Gallina On Americaâ€™s Biggest Threats Today [e-session]': Interview with Juliane, which really comes across as a scripted PR talk in which it is hard to tell for certain how much passion, obsession and knowledge she really has about technology and geopolitics. The "big five" for the CIA to keep an eye on, according to her, are AI and machine learning, crypto, quantum computing, biotech, and micro-electronics and communication.

  In university, Gloss was active in gender equality and environmental protest circles. He joined Rainbow Family, a leftwing environmental protest group, and in 2023 traveled to Hatay, Turkey, to assist in the recovery following the earthquake that killed more than 56,000 people. Alek Minassian

- Person with an Armenian-sounding name that was behind the April 23, 2018 Toronto Van Attack. This type of attack had recently been employed by radical Muslims, among those linked to ISIS. However, it was quickly reported by the Canadian authorities that Minassian didn't have a (Muslim) terrorist motive and that it appeared he was just a mentally deficient loner.
- Back in early 2017, this author already indicated that 4Chan forum members, who started the Pizzagate "affair", appear to constitute an ultraright controlled opposition action group. Next thing we know, throughout 2017, Soros-associate and "liberal CIA" anti-Trump activist Shia LaBeouf, was involved in an international "capture the flag" battle, with various 4Chan members posting fascist propaganda. And here in April 2018 we have Alek Minassian talking about 4chan and a "Incel Rebellion" ("Involuntary Celibate" Rebellion) right before his terrorist attack on 25 individuals, mostly women. Considering the international liberal elite-backed feminist war, this incident should be labeled a highly curious event.
- In addition, literally the week before, a lawyer purposely burned himself to death in an environmental protest. Thinking this was odd, this author checked if this lawyer had received Soros or related "liberal CIA" funding. He had, through his employer Lambda Legal. Coincidences keep stacking up.
- Update: Minassian was a student at the Seneca School of Computer Studies and and a team member at its Centre for Development of Open Technology (CDOT). The "inclusive" and "diverse" Senaca College is partnered with the Mozilla Foundation, in turn financed by foundations as MacArthur, Ford, Knight and others.

- cdot.senecacollege.ca/documents/CDOT-handout.pdf (accessed: May 5, 2018): *"Seneca has a significant partnership with the Mozilla project, creators of the popular Firefox web browser. (mostly women; tried to get the police to shoot him): "A Facebook profile for the suspect, deleted shortly after the attack, included a post written Monday with anti-women references.
  [Screenshot of Facebook message:] "Alek Minassian. 2 hrs. Private (Recruit) Minassian Infantry 000010, wishing to speak to Sgt 4chan please. C23249161. The Incel Rebellion has already begun! We will overthrow all the Chads and Stacys! All hail the Supreme Gentleman Elliot Rodger! [killed 6 people at UCSB after writing an anti-women manifesto]"
  In the hours after the attack, an unverified Facebook profile for the suspect emerged with a post referencing the anonymous online forum 4chan, which is often the source of online hate and hoaxes. A Facebook employee speaking on background confirmed to BuzzFeed News that the since-removed profile for the suspect was authentic. ...
  Reddit banned the Incel ["involuntary celibate"] community from its website last year after updating its policy to ban glorification and incitement of violence. The chat board frequently advocated for sexual violence and hate against women. ...

- Thaddeus Russell on the Joe Rogan Experience:
  - September 23, 2014, Thaddeus Russell on the Joe Rogan Experience: Complaining that colleges are completely liberal and irrational feminism. Also talking about U.S. imperialism. Also: "There's [the] White Savior Complex. Remember Kony 2012? That's like the greatest example of that. Yeah, well, for good reason [it vanished quickly]. That's like the greatest example of that. A really awesome writer named Teju Cole ... talked about Kony 2012 and the White savior complex. A lot of my work is on this. It's mostly white people. All elite people. Who take it upon themselves to save their social inferiors, right? And they want to go out and find them, first of all. Find these poor, sad people in the world, wherever they are. Whether it's in the ghetto in Compton, or Rwanda, or wherever, and go save them and change their lives. Uplift them and make them more like us. It's the psychological and cultural core of imperialism and to me it has lead to the deaths of millions of people. ... There's also this very arrogant, paternalistic impulse that a lot of people have, in particular white people. But certainly elite people. I know, I hate white people. I'm glad you are with me on this." This is a strange interpretation. Kony 2012 was nothing more than U.S. government-backed propaganda, as is so much of the propaganda to intervene in other countries. But it's just that: propaganda. At least Teju Cole made that point near the bottom of his article.
    - March 21, 2012, Teju Cole in The Atlantic, 'The White-Savior Industrial Complex' (Teju Cole's tweets also made it to the New York Times): "Success for Kony 2012 would mean increased militarization of the anti-democratic Yoweri Museveni government, which has been in power in Uganda since 1986 and has played a major role in the world's deadliest ongoing conflict, the war in the Congo. But those whom privilege allows to deny constellational thinking would enjoy ignoring this fact. There are other troubling connections, not least of them being that Museveni appears to be a U.S. proxy in its shadowy battles against militants in Sudan and, especially, in Somalia."
  - September 23, 2014, Thaddeus Russell on the Joe Rogan Experience, 1:10:00: "There was this crazy, repressive culture, and Americans lived in it. ... Good Americans - meaning white people - do that: they don't fuck, and they work. That also kinda extended to dancing. ... It was terrible to dance in American culture - if you were a white person. Leisure was bad. ... Then along come these people from another place, West Africa, where none of these ideas existed. The Protestant work ethic? What are you talking about? ... They also believed in moving your body as a good thing, a beautiful thing. To them, moving it in sensual ways, dancing and otherwise, [was fine]. They didn't believe sex outside marriages was wicked. ... They thought women who had sex outside of marriage were fine, that it was no problem. ... They come over here as slaves. ... They had no intention of adapting this insane, oppressive culture that white people were all about. ... So they developed their own... this African-American culture... Jazz. ... White people never could have developed such a thing."

- April 27, 2017, Thaddeus Russell on the Joe Rogan Experience: "
  [Russell:] "Woman" is an invention; it's a social construct. ... What much of the transmovement now is doing, what makes me so sad, is that "I am naturally, biologically, in my core, a woman." No! No one is! The whole point of this movement used to be you can choose to be a gender. Or you can chose not to be a gender. ... They're making these abstractions real again. They're making these claims that are similar to Sam Harris' claims, and to old racist claims, to old sexist claims that if you are born a particular way, biologically, this is who you are. ...
  [Joe Rogan:] You're losing me in a huge way. You don't think you are born a man? No? Why are you a man? For all sorts of reasons? None of them being the XY chromosome ... you have testicals [and] a penis... you naturally gravitate towards male activities as boxing, kickboxing? ...
  [Russell:] There are certain inventions, certain social constructs, that do nothing but bad things. ... And they're only social constructs, like race and gender. ... With race, the same thing happens with sickle-cell anemia. This is what everybody invokes when they claim race is real. Only black people get sickle-cell anemia. Well, guess what, the numbers there are about the same as the number of men who are infertile. Why then are people with sickle-cell anemia definitely black? ... Are there any two females who are identical? No. There are no two organisms that are identical. ..."
- October 19, 2010, Huffington Post, 'Why I Got Fired From Teaching American History': "I was raised by pot-smoking, nudist, socialist revolutionaries as an egghead white boy in black neighborhoods in Berkeley and Oakland. I nearly flunked eighth grade and finished high school with a C average. Then I went to the anarchist, ultra-hippy Antioch College in Ohio, which accepted all their applicants, didn't give grades, and didn't have a history department.
  So even though I managed to pull myself out of that background and into and through Columbia for a PhD, then onto a job at an elite college, I was highly uncomfortable moving from the world of weed to the world of tweed. I hated being "Professor." I cursed in class. I talked about sex. I used politically incorrect terms. My students said they had never heard the things I was teaching them in class. They called me "Bad Thad."

I showed them that during the American Revolution drunkards, laggards, prostitutes, and pirates pioneered many of the freedoms and pleasures we now cherish "including non-marital sex, interracial socializing, dancing, shopping, divorce, and the weekend" and that the Founding Fathers, in the name of democracy, opposed them. I argued not only that many white Americans envied slaves but also that they did so for good reason, since slave culture offered many liberating alternatives to the highly repressive, work-obsessed, anti-sex culture of the early United States. I demonstrated that prostitutes, not feminists, won virtually all the freedoms that were denied to women but are now taken for granted. By tracing the path of immigrants from arrival as â€œprimitivesâ€ to assimilation as â€œcivilizedâ€ citizens, I explained that white people lost their rhythm by becoming good Americans. I presented evidence that without organized crime, we might not have jazz, Hollywood, Las Vegas, legal alcohol, birth control, or gay rights, since only gangsters were willing to support those projects when respectable America shunned them. ...

College students are normally taught a history that is the story of struggles between capitalists and workers, whites and blacks, men and women. ...

Several distinguished professors from Columbia showed up, since the university has final say on all tenure decisions at its sister college, Barnard. [They were very hostile] ... Emails [soon] came into the hiring committee from â€œimportant places,â€ I was told, calling my ideas â€œimproper,â€ â€œfrightening,â€ and â€œdangerous.â€ They said my ideas had no place in the academy and insisted that I be terminated. ... After I was told that I would be leaving Barnard, hundreds of students protested in faculty and deansâ€™ offices and the Columbia Spectator devoted an editorial to my case, but to no avail."

- Silverstein has ran the feminist website WomenInHollywood.com since it was founded in 2008. Major foundation financing is not immediately visible, but Silverstein does have a position at Columbia University's all-women Bernard College, a college that seems to put out an unusually high number of future prominent feminists. It should also be noted that Columbia University is one a handful of universities that is considered acceptable for a top government position (cabinet-level).

- Former anti-Vietnam War and anti-communist activist who was on the CIA (leadership's) payroll from 1958 until her exposure in 1962. After that developed/continued the usual Eastern Establishment ties and established herself as one of the premier feminist leaders by the 1970s. By the turn of the century she was advisory board chairman of the George Soros-backed feminist group Equality Now.

- Mother-in-law of actor Christian Bale - one of many pro-Third World immigration propagandists. Close feminist ally in Equality Now of Hollywood stars Meryl Streep and Marvel Avengers creator Joss Whedon.
- Born in 1934. Poor background, partly due to her mother's nervous breakdown at age 34 and the subsequent divorce from her husband. She graduated from Smith College, Mass., one of the nation's largest liberal arts colleges for women (Nancy Reagan and Barbara Bush went to it as well), in 1956. Graduated as a member of Phi Beta Kappa. 1956-1958 Steinem spent in India as a Chester Bowles Asian Fellow, where she was briefly associated with the Supreme Court of India as a Law Clerk to Mehr Chand Mahajan, then Chief Justice of India.

  After returning to the U.S. in 1958, she served as director of the Independent Research Service, an organization funded in secret by a donor that turned out to be the CIA. Steinem was aware she was recruited and funded by the CIA. She worked to send non-Communist American students to the 1959 World Youth Festival.

  In 1960, she was hired by Warren Publishing as the first employee of Help! magazine. In 1962 Esquire magazine features editor Clay Felker gave freelance writer Steinem what she later called her first "serious assignment" regarding contraception. That same year her CIA tie was exposed in the press, right while she was protesting the emerging Vietnam War at the Pentagon.

  In 1963, while working on an article for Show magazine of Pilgrims Society member and the psychedelics-affiliated Huntington Hartford, Steinem was employed as a Playboy Bunny at the New York Playboy Club (the Playboy Foundation also became "liberal CIA" and psychedelics-affiliated) and soon wrote about the way Playboy Bunnies were exploited, often sexually.

  Conducted an interview with John Lennon, the prominent ally of LSD guru Timothy Leary (who also was a visitor to Hugh Hefner's Playboy Mansion), for Cosmopolitan magazine in 1964.

  Employed by New York magazine in 1968. In 1969, she covered an abortion speak-out for New York Magazine, which was held in a church basement in Greenwich, New York. She felt what she called a "big click" at the speak-out, and later said she didn't "begin my life as an active feminist" until that day. In 1969, she published an article, "After Black Power, Women's Liberation" which brought her to national fame as a feminist leader.
- Gloria Steinem was deeply connected to the CIA in the 1958-1962 period, and really also the Rockefeller elite, much more than she led on in a 1963 interview about her CIA ties:
  - Circa 1963, Gloria Steinem video interview part of the JFK Assassination Archives: "Interviewer: Gloria, at the festival you worked for the Independent Research Service. Exactly when did your own association with the CIA start and in what fashion? Did they come to you, or did you go to them?

GS: In 1958 when I came home from India I discussed with student leaders past and present, many of them acted with the National Student Association, this kind of small foundation to encourage Americans to go. They thought it was a good idea too. I was then told by foundations and professors and friends that I should not do this, that I would get in trouble with the House of American Activities Committee, the American Legion - all of those 50s people. And I became convinced that it was impossible. It was at that point that the student leaders said to me that they had in the past received funds for international programs from the CIA and felt that this was important and could also be funded by the CIA.

Interviewer: Did you feel that you really tried? Did you go around to all the wealthy private foundations, wealthy private people and explain your point of view and explain why you felt it was important that that the United States be represented at these things in a certain way? What did they tell you?

GS: They told me, well, the Ford Foundation for instance told me for instance, we were too liberal and too controversial and that we would endanger their cultural programs in Austria; the first festival was being held in Vienna. It was not encouraging at all, and the private individuals to whom I went, often had particular points of view to put forward, which would have been much much more restricting than the CIA funds were - which were free and no one was told what to say.

Interviewer: What do you mean they were free? It was easier to work with the CIA than a private organization?

GS: That's right. That's right. And the reason I think that comes as a surprise as it did to me at the time and I had the conventional liberal's view of the CIA as a right wing incendiary group and I was amazed to discover that this was far from the case. That they were enlightened, liberal, non-partisan activists of the sort that characterized the Kennedy administration, for instance.

Interviewer: You have now been working for the CIA since 1962. You still criticize, you were down there recently in Washington?

GS: Yes. Yes. When the story broke that I had for four four years been a Central Intelligence agent I was demonstrating outside the Pentagon underneath Mr. McNamara's office against bombing in Vietnam. This did not precisely fit with the image of a CIA agent, but then, neither does the CIA."

- 1992, Kai Bird, 'The Chairman: John J. McCloy and the Making of the American Establishment', pp. 483-484, 727: "In the summer of 1959, just before [top Rockefeller agent John] McCloy took his family for an extended trip to Europe, [CIA psychological warfare expert] C.D. Jackson wrote to remind McCloy that later that summer a World Youth Festival was scheduled to take place in Vienna. Jackson asked McCloy to contribute an article, perhaps on the "benign and constructive aspects" of the U.S. occupation of Germany. The piece would appear in a daily newspaper to be published in Vienna in conjunction with the festival. McCloy agreed, and the article was published (in five languages) in a newspaper distributed by a twenty-five-year-old Smith graduate named Gloria Steinem. ...

By the time Jackson first approached McCloy, in the autumn of 1958, he and Cord Meyer, head of the CIA's International Organizations Division (IO), had a plan. The Agency would provide discreet funding to an "informal group of activists" who would constitute themselves as an alternative American delegation to the festival. The CIA would not only pay their way but also assist them to distribute books and publish a newspaper in Vienna. Among other individuals, Jackson and Meyer hired Gloria Steinem to work with them. Steinem had recently returned from a two-year stint in India, where she had been a Chester Bowles Asian Fellow. ...

Convinced that a contingent of liberal but anticommunist American students should go to Vienna, [Steinem] heard through her contacts at the National Student Association that there might be funding available to finance American participation in the festival. Working through C.D. Jackson and Cord Meyer, Steinem then set up an organization in Cambridge, Massachusetts called the Independent Service for Information on the Vienna Youth Festival. She obtained tax-exempt status, and Jackson helped her raise contributions from various American corporations, including the American Express Company. But most of the money came from the CIA, to be managed by Jackson in a "special account." The entire operation cost in the range of $85,000, a not inconsiderable sum in those years. (Steinem's organization, later renamed the Independent Research Service, continued to receive support from the CIA through 1962, when it financed an American delegation to the Helsinki Youth Festival.) Steinem ended up working closely with Samuel S. Walker, Jr., vice-president of the CIA-funded Free Europe Committee. Because the Austrians did not want to be associated with the Free Europe Committee, the Agency set up a commercial front called the Publications Development Corporation (PDC). Walker was made president of this dummy corporation, funded in part by "a confidential one-year contract" worth $273,000 from the Free Europe Committee. His job was to supervise the book-and-newspaper operation at the Youth Festival."

She is, therefore, always, woman-like, a lover of young men, because they are less cautious, more violent, and with more audacity command her."*

She bears the guilt of life not by acting but by suffering, through the pangs of childbirth, caring for the child, and subservience to her husband, for whom she is supposed to be a patient and cheering companion. She is not granted the most vehement sufferings, joys and expressions of power, but her life is supposed to glide by more quietly, less significantly and more gently than that of a man, without being essentially happier or unhappier.*

    Women are suited to be nurses and governesses of our earliest childhood precisely by the fact that they themselves are childish, silly and short-sighted, in a word, big children their whole life long, a sort of intermediate stage between a child and a man, who is the actual human being. Just look at a girl as she dawdles, dances around with and sings to a child for days, and then imagine what a man doing his utmost could achieve in her stead!"

    *) 1883-1892, 'Thus Spoke Zarathustra: A Book for All and None', 'Part I: 14. The Friend': "All-too-long have a slave and a tyrant been concealed in woman. Therefore woman is not yet capable of friendship: she knows only love. Woman's love involves injustice and blindness against everything that she does not love. And even in the knowing love of a woman there is still always surprise attack and lightning and night along with the light. Woman is not yet capable of friendship: women are still cats and birds. Or at best, cows. Woman is not yet capable of friendship. But tell me, you men, who among you is capable of friendship?"

    *) 1886, Friedrich Nietzsche, 'Beyond Good and Evil', Part VII, Aphorism 239: "In no age has the weak sex been treated with such respect on the part of men as in our time ... of democracy... Is it any wonder that this respect immediately leads to abuse? ... Briefly put, woman is losing her shame [and] taste. She is forgetting to be afraid of man. But the woman who "forgets fear" abandons her most womanly instincts. ... Let's not deceive ourselves about it! Wherever the industrial spirit has triumphed over the military and aristocratic spirit, woman ... empowers herself with new rights and strives to become "master" and writes the "progress" of woman on her banners and little flags...

    The "Emancipation of Woman," to the extent that that is desired and demanded by women themselves (and not just by superficial men), has, as a result, produced a peculiar symptom of the growing weakening and deadening of the most feminine instincts. There is stupidity in this development, an almost masculine stupidity... to neglect to practice the art of one's own true weapons: ... discipline and a refined cunning humility, to work with a virtuous audacity against man's faith ... with constant chatter to talk men emphatically out of the idea that woman, like a delicate, strangely wild, and often pleasing domestic animal, must be maintained, cared for, protected, and looked after...

    The thing in woman that arouses respect and often enough fear is her nature, which is "more natural" than man's nature, her genuine predatory and cunning adaptability, her tiger's claws under the glove, the naivete of her egotism, her ineducable nature and inner wildness, the incomprehensibility, breadth, and roaming of her desires and virtues. . . . With all this fear, what creates sympathy for this dangerous and beautiful cat "woman" is that she appears to suffer more, to be more vulnerable and in need of love, and to be condemned to suffer disappointment more than any animal. Fear and pity... Is the magic spell of woman now in the process of being broken? Is the process of making woman boring slowly coming about? O Europe! Europe! We know the horned animal which has always been most attractive to you. Its danger still constantly threatens you! ....

Of course, there are enough idiotic friends of women and corruptors of women among the scholarly asses of the male sex who counsel woman to defeminize herself in this manner and to imitate all the foolish things which make the "man" in Europe and European "manliness" sick - people who want to bring woman down to the level of a "common education," perhaps even to reading the newspapers and discussing politics. Here and there they want even to make women into free spirits and literati: as if a woman without piety were not something totally repulsive or ridiculous to a profound and godless man. Almost everywhere people ruin woman's nerves with the most sickly and most dangerous of all forms of music (our most recent German music) and make her more hysterical every day and more incapable of her first and last vocation, giving birth to strong children."
